March of Dimes Must Be Biggest Yet for Nebraska

Nebraska's 1946 March of Dimes will have to be its biggest yet, Walter F. Cozad, State Chairman, Friday informed Mrs. Esther Donat Chairman for Cass county's March of Dimes drive which starts January 14 to continue through January 31.

This is the annual fund-raising appeal of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis in which it bases its entire program of care and treatment of polio patients, epidemic aid, personnel training, research and education. Mr. Cozad stated.

He said that the need is even greater this year than in previous March of Dimes drives because 1945 was the fourth worst polio period in the history of the disease. "Each epidemic leaves hundreds of new cases that must receive continuing care, some for months, others for years."

State Health Department records at Lincoln show that there were 120 cases of polio reported in Nebraska last year. Over the nation 14 thousand men, women and children were stricken by the disease.

"Nebraskans have demonstrated their generosity in previous March of Dimes drives," Mr. Cozad declared. "I am confident that they will respond just as generously this year."

One-half of all contributions to the March of Dimes remains with local chapters for hospitalization, special equipment, transportation and treatment for polio patients in the community. The other half goes to the National Foundation for research, education and emergency aid in epidemics.

During the year, the National Foundation sent $6,300 to four Nebraska chapters, at Morrill, Seward, Cummings and Kearney Counties when the severity of the polio attack in those counties drained local chapter funds.

The property owners involved are William Brandt and Mary Brandt, of Nehawka, and Mary Meyers and her children, of Avoca. The action was filed by County Attorney Walter H. Smith.

"The action was necessary," Smith explained, "because the State is planning improvements on the 'O-Street Road' between Union and Lincoln. In order to make the improvements it has been necessary for the State to buy tracts of land on either side of the road. The State was unable to reach an agreement with these property holders."

December Snows Set New Record

December, 1945, was a cold month in Nebraska with record-breaking snowfall in some southeastern counties. The month, with average temperatures of 21.6 degrees for the state, was the coldest since 1932, when the December average was 21.2 degrees.

The western division averaged 2.4 degrees above the eastern and central divisions. Subnormal temperatures prevailed from the 9th through the 26th and subzero temperatures were recorded at night in most sections from the 15th through the 19th; the lowest reported was 24 below zero at Bridgeport in Morrill county. The highest was 67 degrees at Oxford on the 7th.

A considerable range in precipitation occurred from east to west across the state, with a deficiency in much of the western third and a marked excess in the east. The greatest monthly precipitation was 2.76 inches at Geneva, and the least .07 inch at Merrigan.

Much of the state was snow-covered for the greater part of the month, favoring the softening of the previously frozen surface soil and absorption of needed moisture for wheat and future crops, especially in the southeast, where snow was heaviest. Snowfall on the 24th-25th over most southeastern counties amounted to over ten inches, with over twelve inches in some localities, the largest amount reported being 15.0 inches at Superior in Nuckolls county. December snowfall records were broken at Lincoln for greatest 24-hour fall, greatest depth on ground, and monthly total. Some of the larger monthly totals were: Geneva and Kramer, 19.5; Raymond, 20.6; Superior, 20.7 and Lincoln, 22.3 inches.

The snow and cold weather stopped or retarded corn husking and necessitated a large increase in stock feeding operations. Two deaths are attributed to exposure to the severe weather; George W. Quinlan was found dead near his home at Wymore on the 19th and Walter Klein in a snow-covered wheat field 30 miles northwest of Sidney, on the 23rd.

NOTES ON NEBRASKA FARMING

Put That Waste Land to Work
From Webster county comes a suggestion that may apply to other sections of the state.

The query from the county extension office in Red Cloud is: have you ever thought of growing your own fence post, especially in the river bottom or along creeks? It is suggested that it is a difficult problem to grow one's own fence posts and it can be a paying proposition since costs are less and posts are better.

Oscar orange, black locust, red cedar and mulberry are the most durable wood for fence posts. The three latter varieties are available in Clark-McNary seedling trees offered through the Agricultural extension Service.

Black locust produces fence posts in the shortest time, about eight or ten years after planting. Honey locusts have long, sharp spines and posts made from them do not last well; therefore, farmers are cautioned to make sure they have black locust when planting for fence posts.

Black walnut trees if planted in soil that is well-drained and where moisture conditions are favorable will produce a valuable wood and nut crop.

For post production trees should be planted on high, dry ground, but be closely spaced where plenty of moisture is available.

Weed Districts Discuss Problems Wednesday
Officials of noxious weed control districts of five eastern Nebraska counties are meeting in Fremont Wednesday, January 9, to discuss some of their mutual problems and to learn the latest experimental results from the men in charge of the state weed eradication program, according to Sam Lingo, Washington county extension agent.

During the past year, Lingo continues, the Washington county district has purchased a carload of sodium chlorate, most of which was sold to farmers to eradicate patches of bindweed on farms. The past two falls, the district has had a man available to apply the chemical with a sprayer for farmers desiring such service.

In 1945, an experimental plot was laid out on the farm of Ansel Toft to test the killing power of the new chemical, 2-4-D, which has shown great promise as a weed killer.

Directors of the Washington county district who will attend the Fremont meeting are: Robert J. Foley, chairman; Claus B. McInners, secretary; Ansel Toft, treasurer; and William C. Jensen and Frank Brodersen.

Handle Tractor With Care
One of the chief reasons the tractor is involved in so many farm accidents is that it is operated on a year-round basis, operating in winter as well as summer, according to the National Safety Council. Certain precautions, other than those necessary during the planting season, are required for operating a tractor safely during the winter.

As with a car, care should be taken in starting and warming up the farm tractor in a closed building. Windows and doors of the barn or shed should be opened wide for maximum ventilation. The surest way to avoid the dangers of carbon monoxide is to back the tractor out into the open to warm it up.

A firm footing when cranking the tractor is more important in winter than summer. Spreading sand or ashes on the ground before starting to crank the tractor is good policy.

Other precautions that are very important are as the National Safety Council lists them: Be sure the tractor is out of gear before starting it. Be sure the crank handle is free of ice. If the tractor radiator must be drained at night, catch the water in a pail to prevent collection and freezing around the tractor.

On icy highways, reduced speed is the chief safety measure to observe. Tractor wheels should be equipped with lugs or chains to prevent skidding and possible overturning on icy surfaces. Snow should be cleaned off boots before mounting the tractor. Make certain the clutch pedal is not slippery. Before taking the tractor out for the day, clear snow and ice from the platform, steps, axles and other places used for footing when mounting.
