THE STORY: Ann has a run-in with Beulah Bedelle, self-styled social arbiter of Plattsmouth, on her first meeting. Beulah claims the first Mrs. Drake is her best friend. Ann later meets and makes friends with lovely Joan Warren and her four youngsters. Joan is amazed to learn that Ann is the new Mrs. Colin Drake.

XVI
ANN grinned at Joan. "You don't know Colin, do you?"
"Of course I know him," Joan said indignantly. "Stan is quite an important executive of the Drake Line. He's been after me to call on you, but you know the way it is—." She gestured sweepingly over the heads of her children. "I don't go in for society," she added.

"Nor do I," Ann said. "Perhaps it's just as well if the lady I met this morning is the abiter. Somehow, she didn't seem to respond to my fresh and girlish charm."
"Dear Beulah," Joan murmured. "No one likes her—but she's got 'em buffaloed. Or maybe Skippy likes her, though it seems incredible. He's a lamb, and everyone loves him."
"Who is Skippy?"
"Her husband. It's short for Skipper—everyone called him that until Stan came along and changed it to Skippy, on account of he adored the Lawrenceville stories in the days of his youth. He's Stan's boss. Stan's my husband. But you were saying something about Beulah being social arbiter—Mrs. Colin Drake is that, whether she goes in for society or not, and don't let Beulah kid you."
"She told me that Colin's former wife is her most intimate friend," Ann said diffidently.
Joan snorted. "Don't you believe it. Beulah would have liked to wall—she doesn't believe in divorce, and has aired her views rather freely that you and Mr. Drake are—um, I guess I should remember the widely quoted saying about little pitchers. You get

Ann wouldn't, and said so with emphasis.
THE Warren home was a pleasant, rambling place, of no particular period of design. The rooms were large and livable and lived-in, and even the piled-up furniture and workmen about couldn't disguise that fact. Joan was blissfully unapologetic for her house. She had told Ann the floors were being done over, and Ann still had wanted to come out, so she felt no apologies necessary. After putting the children to bed, they curled up in the window-seat in the master bedroom, overlooking the Sound, and lit cigarettes.

"How old are you, Joan?" Ann asked impulsively, then added, "I'm sorry. I didn't really mean to be impertinent."
"Dear child, I'm not ashamed of my age. Rather proud of it, in fact. I'm twenty-eight. I was graduated from the University when I was twenty-two. Stan and I had been married for six months then, and Alan was on the way, but I was determined to get my degree. To prove to myself and the world that I was a domestic science expert, you see. I've been proving it ever since."
"And I'm going on twenty-five myself. I'd better get going on a family, hadn't I?"
Joan studied her cigaret. "It's not a bad idea," she admitted.

WHEN Colin got home that night, Ann was radiant. "I've found a friend in town, Colin—I can call her that already, although I've only known her today."
"Who?"
"Joan Warren—AND her four bright and beautiful youngsters." "She has a bright and beautiful husband, too," Colin said. "I'm given to understand he is very valuable to the Drake Line. I'm glad you've found a friend, my darling—you haven't seemed to take much to local talent so far."
"She's real—and admirable—and altogether swell. I'm so glad I've met her." She was so pleased with Joan, she quite forgot to tell Colin of her less pleasant meeting of the day.
