union.

Negotiations with East Coast shipowners were broken off yesterday after the union insisted that settlement of the walkout hinge on an agreement between West Coast shippers and the West Coast unions on strike. The operators also refused to negotiate further until the union ordered security watches back on the idle vessels to protect cargoes.

Withdrawal of security watches from the struck ships was an unprecedented action in maritime labor disputes, Frank J. Taylor, chairman of the operators' negotiating committee, said. He warned the Coast Guard that the deserted ships "are in a hazardous and unsafe condition," and asked the government to take steps to insure the safety of the vessels.
