at the piano, using "Clare-d-lune," by Debussy, and "Andantino," by Lemare, as preludes. Mrs. Jess Livingston, sister-in-law of the bride, sang "A Dawn Song." Candles were lighted by the two bridesmaids, Charlotte Rieck, Weeping Water, and Margaret Smith of Plattsmouth, who were gowned in white. Preceding the bridal party were two flower girls, Nancy Livingston and Joan Schultz, who wore pink floor length dresses.

The matron of honor, Mrs. Maurice Hammons, was gowned in white satin, and carried pink gladioli. The bride, who was escorted to the altar by her father, was charming in her white gown, with full length sleeves, and having a yoke of net. Her finger tip length veil was of shadow lace, and it hung from a white pearl studded tiara. Her arm bouquet was of white gardenias and white carnations. The double ring ceremony was performed by Rev. Charles Livingston, brother of the bride, with Mrs. Livingston singing "I Love You Truly" during the ceremony, and "The Lord's Prayer" at its close.

The groom's best man was Oliver Schultz of Lincoln, a cousin of the groom, and the two ushers were Clayton Sack and Donald Otto Lehmgrins, both of Lincoln. Mendelsohn's Wedding March were used during the ceremony.

After the ceremony all were invited to the dining room of the church for the reception which followed. Here, again, flowers were in profusion, white and lavender being the prevailing colors. During the reception the guests were entertained by a sextette, composed of Cyrus Livingston, Harrison Livingston, and Harold Harmon, Weeping Water; Lloyd Livingston, York; Jess Livingston, Lincoln and Rev. Charles Livingston, Omaha.

The bride and groom left immediately after the ceremony for Denver, Estes Park, and other Colorado places of interest. They will make their home on a farm near Walton.
