OLD GRAY MARE QUESTION SOLVED BY VETERINARIANS
CHICAGO (U.P.)—The American Veterinary Medical Association dug into the oats bag and it has found the answer to the ageless question of why "the old gray mare ain't what she used to be." It can be blamed on "melanoblastoma."

"Melanoblastoma," it should be explained quickly, is a technical word for a kind of tumor which horses get if they aren't careful. The tumors, the AVMA explained, come from old age. "As the horse's hair turns from gray to white, the pigment of the original color becomes concentrated in certain places on the skin or in the organs, and tumors are the result," the association said.

Mr. and Mrs. I. L. Kocian were at Loma, Nebraska Monday to attend the funeral of Mrs. Anton Kocian, an aunt, who died last week after a heart attack.
