Crop Disease Forecasting
The United States Department of Agriculture regional program for experimental forecasting of the spread of certain crop diseases is getting underway. Three field headquarters have been set up at which federal specialists will cooperate with state plant pathologists in compiling reports on the first appearances and prevalence of late blight of potatoes and tomatos, blue mold of tobacco, and downy mildew of cucurbits. They will also relate the occurrence of disease with the weather and other environmental factors.

The station at Ames, Iowa, will coordinate work for the states of North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois, and Indiana.

Out Of Old Nebraska

By James C. Olson
Superintendent,
State Historical Society

There was no lack of opportunity for higher education in territorial Nebraska—on paper.

Within two years from the time the first legal settler entered Nebraska the territorial legislature had chartered seven institutions of higher learning. Before the territorial period was over, a total of 13 such institutions had been provided for—more than half the total number of colleges, universities and junior colleges in the state today.

Of all these early institutions only one exists today in any form whatever—the Peru Seminary and college, which developed into the present State Teachers College at Peru.

Most of the others never got beyond the stage of glorious planning. The few which actually had doors to open soon were forced to close them again in face of meager population and uncertain financial support. Indeed, a good many of those early towns which once had visions of becoming great educational centers are not even indicated on present-day maps. Some of them faded quickly in the rapidly changing fortunes of the frontier. Just ten years after the charter of Nemaha University at Archer, for example, the townsite was vacated by act of the legislature.

There were a number of reasons for this great, if abortive, interest in higher education on the part of Nebraska's territorial pioneers. Each town, of course, felt that an institution of higher learning would help attract settlers, and thus was essential to development. Then, too, some of the colleges probably were founded as purely speculative enterprises. It seemed that virtually everyone was speculating in one thing or another during the early territorial period and there was no reason why higher education should have been overlooked. As speculative enterprises, it need not be stated, the colleges and universities were dismal failures.

The basic reason, though, for the founding of so many colleges and universities was the deep interest in higher education abiding in the minds of many of the prominent pioneers. A rather considerable number of those who assumed leadership in the new territory were young men just out of college—J. Sterling Morton, Thomas B. Cuming, A. J. Poppleton, Robert W. Furnas, and others—and were concerned that Nebraska should early come under the influence of institutions of higher education and that the young people of Nebraska be given every opportunity for college training here at home.

The interest of leading pioneers was shared by many humbler citizens. Many an overland wagon carried among those things it lugged so laboriously across the plains more than a goodly portion of books.

Four-H Feeding Project
Nemaha County Agent Bob Wilson tells of a feeding project set up by members of the Bethel Meat Producers livestock club, and the Blue Ribbon Stock club. Through an arrangement with the Auburn Nebraska Alfalfa Company, Jean McMinnich of the Bethel Meat Producers, and Norma Prather of the Blue Ribbon Stock Club will feed their 4-H calves dehydrated alfalfa mixed in the feed ration. Two tons of dehydrate alfalfa was donated by the mill for the tests, and the girls will keep records of their feeding activities so that their calves may be compared with calves fed on other feeds.

Laugh Off Drought
LLANO, Tex. (UP)—Drought, described by some ranchers as worst they remember on the Edwards plateau of Texas, is not causing the cattle and sheepmen any financial loss. High price of meat makes it possible for the ranchers to sell their livestock at a neat profit, if the range is not sufficient to feed them through the winter.

State Safety Patrol Wars on Road Accidents

Captain C. J. Sanders of the State Safety Patrol has announced that the entire resources of the Patrol will be thrown into the fray against traffic accidents in ever increasing intensity in getting behind the Nebraska State Safety Council's program to "Save 100 Lives in '48."

"Good enforcement," Dwight Havens, president of the Council, said, "is a major bulwark in the campaign to 'Save 100 Lives in '48' and Captain Sanders' assurance that the Patrol will redouble its efforts in this regard will be gratefully received by all good drivers."

Havens, in complimenting the Patrol on a tough job well done during 1947, said that it was not until nearly the end of the year that the Patrol received additional manpower and patrol cars to aid them in the terrific job of adequately covering the 9,500 miles of Nebraska's highway system.

"Captain Sanders gave me some very interesting statistics," Havens said, "that provide convincing proof that the patrol was very busy during 1947. They made 7,557 arrests of which 7,097 violators were successfully prosecuted. The Patrol also made 11,863 assists on the highway. These included helping many motorists to change tires, getting stalled motorists started or towing them into town, and also including 'mercy runs' which involve taking injured or sick individuals to the hospital."

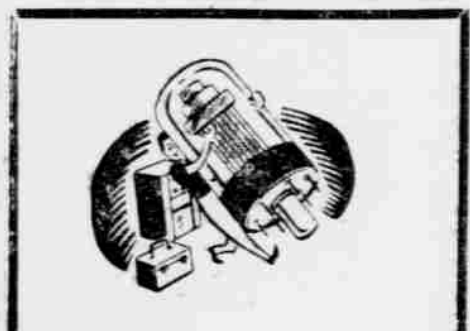

The 106 patrolmen drove the Patrol's 68 cars 2,642,091 miles during 1947. Havens also pointed out that these men are on twenty-four hour call and they are frequently forced to give up their off duty time when emergencies arise.

The Patrol's 21 radio operators in nine stations strategically located across the state, are in constant touch with all Patrol cars, which are equipped with three-way radios. "This three-way radio communication system," Havens continued, "is a distinct improvement over the old for it not only permits communication between the car and station but also between cars."

Havens also brought out the fact that in addition to the Patrol's traffic activities, it is working extensively with all state and national agencies in the apprehension of criminals. "All of these activities add up to a big job," Havens concluded, "and I feel that the Patrol is to be commended on the excellent handling of these activities with its limited personnel."

Beef Grades and Values to Show Less Choice Now

Much of the beef and lamb going into the market this winter comes from animals that have had less grain than usual. Animals will be slaughtered at lighter weights, before they have been heavily fed on grain which builds up fat. This means less Choice grade beef and more Good, Commercial, and Utility grades. The lower grades of meat do not mean the homemaker is buying less nutritive meat than she has been accustomed to buying.

Meat is not graded on a basis of its nutritive value but on its appetizing qualities. In many cases the lower grades offer more important values than the top grades. The leaner beef from grass or silage fed animals usually sell as lower Good or Commercial or Utility grade. Pound for pound these grades have more protein, minerals, and vitamins, and the Choice and high Good grades more fat.

The extra fat in choice beef or lamb is a luxury rather than an essential to diet. Dr. L. A. Maynard of Cornell University says that beef cattle and lambs should be fattened on grain only long enough to produce meat of acceptable quality.

There is no nutritional justification for feeding to produce fat. Vegetable fats serve as well in the diet and are produced more cheaply. Most of the fat of highly fattened animals is wasted instead of being consumed as meat.
