

Timing Important In Choosing Mate Educator Finds

By BETTY BAUER
 United Press Staff Correspondent
 ITHACA, N. Y. (AP)—Divorce rates might go down if young people would put as much emphasis on when to marry as on whom to marry, in the opinion of Dr. Lemo Rockwood.

The Cornell University professor of child development and family relationships believes too many marriages go on the rocks because the husbands, wives or both are not ready physiologically.

"A young person will know if he is ready for marriage only if he knows himself," Mrs. Rockwood said.

To do this, she advised, "he should watch himself in his relations with other people. He should form an idea of what kind of a friend he is, what he expects from friendships with others, and what he expects of life."

Basis of Findings
 Dr. Rockwood bases her findings on hundreds of interviews with young people about to marry and with married couples having troubles adjusting to double harness.

One of the big troubles, she said, is the "ideal man" and "dream girl" imagined by young people and projected on the person who attracts them most.

"Each sees the loved one through a rosy haze and doesn't give the prospective mate a chance to be himself during the courting period," she observed.

Then, she warned, frequently couples reach the feeling they have been "cheated" in their choice of a mate.

"When things go wrong," Dr.

Rockwood said, "the couple must decide whether there is more in the marriage which they wish to salvage or more that they wish to scrap—and make adjustments, or dissolve the marriage, according to their decisions.

Placing the Blame
 She blames the "appalling" number of broken war marriages on either one or both of the persons concerned being either unready or unwilling to accept responsibilities of marriage.

"Too many young people think, 'We'll get married and live happily ever after,' the marriage specialist warned. "They overlook the fact that they are marrying for 'better or for worse'; that they must be emotionally ready to face every contingency of marriage—arrival of babies, possibility of the husband's losing his job, illness, necessity for helping parents financially, etc."

Dr. Rockwood, herself married to an architect, has one ideal family to use for an example for young couples. Her mother and father, married when they were 17 and 19 years old, respectively, recently celebrated their 53rd wedding anniversary. She is the oldest of their three children.

Tiny Ghost Craft All That Remains Of Jap Navy

YOKOSUKA, Japan. (AP)—Once rined by one of the world's great naval forces, Japan is defended today only by five American fighting ships and a handful of rusty minesweepers.

In this former key naval base, where Japan sent out her mighty war-time fleet ranging across the Pacific, the answer is plain. The Japanese fleet is extinct.

Only tiny 100-ton wooden craft that constantly ply the harbor waters of Japan in search of mines remain. They hunt for magnetic mines dropped in strategic waters by U. S. B-29s. Even these tiny ships will be worthless when their task is through.

Thousands of tons of Japanese navy hulls lie at the bottom of Manila, Kure and Yokohama harbors. Great Britain, Russia, China and the United States account for almost the entire remainder of the fleet.

Only sleek warships, American and British, are now seen in the waters of Japan. An American cruiser and four destroyers make up the sole sea force permanently stationed here.

Constant Patrol Made
 The American vessels constantly tour Japanese ports and patrol ships are on the look-out for Koreans who try to cross the straits and enter Japan illegally.

The small Japanese craft which patrol in search of mines are scarcely distinguishable from the large fleets of fishing vessels that set out from Japanese harbors each day before dawn.

Low-flying B-29s sowed the mines in narrow channels and harbors in early 1945 to bottle up Japanese shipping. But now they menace American vessels.

The mines were set to explode after a certain number of vessels passed over them. Japanese fishing craft have been victims of some. But still there are many left—just how many and where they are, no one knows.

The recommended time table is given in the new USDA bulletin, AIS-64—Home Canning of Fruits and Vegetables at your County Extension Office. If your time table calls for more than a 10-pound pressure, chances are you have over-cooked your products which will not have a pleasing flavor. The new time table reduces the time on some vegetables. Be sure you are right with this approved time table.

Butternut BREAD'S GOOD IDEAS

KITCHEN TRICK
 LET FRESHLY opened canned vegetables stand for 15 minutes before heating. They regain oxygen lost by canning. Makes a real difference in flavor.

HOUSEHOLD HINT
 IF YOUR tile sink is chipped, touch it up with wax crayon in a matching color. Coat with a thin covering of transparent cement or colorless nail enamel. This stands up under many washings and is easily renewed.

RECIPE
MEXICAN CARROTS
 12 small carrots 1/2 c. chili sauce
 1 clove garlic 2 Tbsp. salad oil

Cook carrots in small amount of water until tender. Drain, then add chili sauce, garlic clove and salad oil. Simmer until well heated, remove garlic clove. Serves 4.
