Visitors are always welcome! For centuries the Christian church has set aside the six weeks before Easter as a period of special preparation.
But why observe Lent? Why a special period of preparation? That all depends upon what significance we attach to the great festivals of Good Friday and Easter.
The Christian religion is built upon the rock bottom fact of Christ's atonement which reached its climax on Good Friday some 1,900 years ago. On that day the Son of God gave His life in payment for the sins of all mankind. As a result of this substitution of the innocent for the guilty, the sins of the entire human race have been atoned.
If you have not yet come to know Christ as your personal Redeemer, our church stands ready to tell you about Him.

Ronnie Takes a Chance A SHORT-SHORT STORY By DANIEL F. LINDSAY

RONNIE BROWN raced into the offices of the Smithville Daily Chronicle. Racing was Ronnie's usual rate of speed. He was sixteen. Had he taken time to walk, he might have had time to think. This, I am sure, never had occurred to him. He slid to a full stop in front of Tom Brennan's desk. Tom was the editor, chief reporter and owner of the Chronicle.
He looked up as Ronnie adjusted his clothing.
"What's up this morning, Fashion Plate?"
"Oh nothing much." He feigned nonchalance. "Just a scoop for your truly. That's all."
"A scoop?" Tom looked mildly interested. "Where, who and how?"

Racing was Ronnie's usual rate of speed.

"Charlie Slater and his wife are getting a divorce." He emphasized this last. "And it's over another woman."
"That's no scoop. It's dirty linen." Tom stared at him coldly. "We don't wash it in the Chronicle. You know that." He lowered his head again.
"Wait a minute," Ronnie insisted. "The other woman is only six years old."
"Well, why didn't you say so?" Ronnie leaned back with a self-satisfied grin. "I got it from Pop. He and Mom were talking last night. Pop is handling Mrs. Slater's defense—whatever you call it. Anyway, they are getting a divorce because Charlie won't let her adopt her niece."
"Why doesn't her sister raise her own kid?"
"They won't let her. She's been in a lot of trouble and the court has decided if Mrs. Slater won't take her she will have to go to the Orphans' Home."
Tom let out a low whistle. "Mrs. Slater must have some sister."
"I guess so," Ronnie admitted. "Whenever they talk about her I have to leave the room."
"I get it." He laughed at Ronnie's hopeful expression. "But I'm not letting you in on it. You can get the facts of life from your Dad."
"Well, then," he sighed dismally. "How about the story? Can I write it up?"
Tom stared into space thoughtfully for a minute. "It hasn't come to court yet, has it?"
"It comes up this morning. I heard Pop say so."
"Well, then," he smiled, "you cover it as it comes out in court."
Ronnie couldn't believe his ears. "You mean I can handle it alone?"
"You'll have to." He didn't look too happy about it. "I've got to go to the capitol this morning. It might take me all day."
"Look, Ronnie." He stared at Ronnie doubtfully. "I'm not too sure about leaving this thing to you."
"Oh I'll be all right, Tom." Ronnie attempted to look older than he was. "Just leave it all to me. I can handle it for you."
"Okay, son, only remember. One dumb trick and we could lose the respect of the whole community. Not to mention a lawsuit which could cost me my newspaper."

"When you leave call the operator and let her put any calls for the paper through to you at the courthouse. Just report exactly what happens in that court room. Nothing more. Above all, no personal opinions. Have it ready for Jack to set up when he comes in at one o'clock."
He started for the door. "Oh, yeah." He turned around. "In the right hand corner of my middle drawer you'll find a card you might need."
Ronnie waited until his car had pulled away and made a dive for the desk. There it was. Ronnie grew two inches in half a minute. It was a press card, with his name on it.
At ten minutes until nine Ronnie entered the county courthouse.
The proceedings consumed nearly an hour. It was a busy hour for him. He tried to get every word spoken into his note book.
He hurried back to the Chronicle and sat down at the battered old typewriter. After two hours of banging on it, he looked up. It was noon.
At one o'clock he had to swallow his pride and help the pressman.
At four o'clock they were all out and on the street.
Ronnie grabbed a copy, as he had seen Tom do, and sinking back into a chair read every line. He was amazed at his own daring as he read the write-up on the divorce proceedings. His cockiness oozed out of him. It didn't seem such a good idea to take matters in his own hands as it had seemed before the paper went to press.
At four-thirty Tom burst into the office with murder in his eye. "Ronnie!" he exploded, "what got into you?"

"What do you mean? It looks pretty good to me." He eyed Tom warily.
"I would." He sank into his chair. "Oh, brother! This should stir up something!" He stared moodily at the desk. "I guess it's all my own fault. I ought to have known better than to leave a sixteen-year-old with a newspaper."
Ronnie got a sick feeling in the pit of his stomach.
"Tom?" He smiled weakly. "I hope it won't cause you any trouble."
"It won't, will it?"
"I don't know, boy." Tom held his head. "Time will tell."
Ronnie took out his press card and laid it on the desk.
"I'll see you later, Tom. If I can help let me know."
Tom looked up, sensing the utter defeat in Ronnie's voice.
"Pick up your card, boy. Every newspaper man has to learn from mistakes. How do you think I learned about personal opinions?"
Ronnie shook his head.
"From just such a stunt as yours. Only it was a murder case. I picked the wrong guy!" He smiled faintly.
"I got canned."
"But I've still got a job?" Ronnie's hopes started to rise.
"Maybe. If I've still got a newspaper you have."
Ronnie felt sick again.
They both turned as the door opened. It was Charlie Slater and his wife. Ronnie swallowed hard. Tom braced himself.
Charlie spoke first. "Tom, did you write that story about us in the paper this afternoon?"
"No, sir," Ronnie interrupted Tom. "I wrote it while he was up at the capitol."
"Why?"
"Why, I don't know." Ronnie racked his brain. "I just said what I thought, I guess."
Mrs. Slater laughed. "We kinda thought it was you, Ronnie."
Ronnie began to feel a bit better.
"Anyway," Charlie smiled, "to make a long story short, we decided if a sixteen-year-old had thought we were a couple of fools, maybe we were."
"And," she finished it for him. "we want to thank you."
Ronnie heaved a sigh of relief. They all laughed.

Youth Fellowship Meeting at 5:30 will be attending "The World Day of Prayer" at the St. Paul's church with the Youth groups from the other churches.
On March 13th our young people will act as host to the other churches Youth Fellowship groups when the Rev. Chas. E. Tyler of the Hillside Presbyterian church of Omaha will address the meeting.
The World Day of Prayer meets this week on Friday at 2:00 o'clock for the adults at the Methodist church, and for the children at 4:00 at the Presbyterian church. These services are sponsored by the women of the 14 different Protestant churches.
A preview of the Sabbath school supplies for the next quarter will be held on Monday at 7:30 at the Westminster church of Lincoln, Nebraska. Anyone planning to go should notify the church before hand.

FOR MORE EGGS AT LESS COST FEED Oyster Shell

Says the Ohio Experimental Station

TESTS SHOW VALUE OF OYSTER SHELL CALCIUM AND VITAMIN "D" FOR MAXIMUM EGG PRODUCTION

Results of recent experiments "make it clear to poultrymen that they can ill afford to take any chances with a deficiency of calcium or vitamin D3 in the ration of their laying flock."

So say D. C. Kennard and V. D. Chamberlin, poultrymen at Ohio Experiment Station, Wooster.

To learn more of the actual effects of deficiencies of vitamin D3 and calcium, experiments were conducted from October 1 to August 16 by the Ohio Station with four groups of 50 Rhode Island pullet layers each confined to indoor floor pens with an eastern exposure. The windows of the pens were kept open whenever the weather permitted. The different groups of layers received the same mash mixture with and without the vitamin D3 and calcium supplements. The layers were fed twice daily the amount of feed they would consume between feeding periods. Except for one group, the oyster shell and granite grit were kept before the birds at all times. Shavings were used for floor litter.

RESULTS OF EXPERIMENTS (Proof Positive)

The Ohio workers report that egg production of the hens that received the basal ration supplemented with oyster shell and vitamin D3 (the control group) was consistent throughout the 45 weeks of the test. In contrast, the egg production of the hens that received the same ration without oyster shell, was consistently low or about half of the control group.

In an effort to obtain essential calcium, those birds deprived of calcium and laying only half as many eggs as those getting calcium in their feed still ate almost the same amount of feed. This means twice the feed per dozen eggs. It is interesting to note, too, that this group, in an apparent effort to make up for the missing calcium, consumed 47 times the granite grit eaten by the control group.

The provision of plenty of calcium (oyster shell) is the simplest, easiest, and least expensive of the essentials for egg production. Perhaps that is why it is so often taken for granted, instead of being given the attention which its importance warrants. — DuPont's "Agriculture News Letter."
