

Jesus Among People of Other Races.

Lesson for March 27: Mark 7: 24-37.

Memory Selection: Acts 10: 34-35.

The Syro-Phoenician woman, of Greek extraction, in "the borders of Tyre and Sidon," showed that mother love is the same everywhere.

Again, in Decapolis, Jesus had compassion upon a poor fellow who had lived in a silence, and the disciples were astonished beyond measure.

These incidents show the attitude of Jesus toward people of other races. While Jesus came of the Jews and labored chiefly for them, his mission was to all men.

We cannot escape the implications of the teaching of the brotherhood of men. The gospel is for all men. We must deal in justice and kindness toward men of other races.

There is needed less of talking and writing about the "race question" and more of good sense and Christian love in our actual dealing with men of other races.

The Lesson-Sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. "The immortal never produces the mortal. Good cannot result in evil. As God himself is good and is Spirit, goodness and spirituality must be immortal. Their opposites, evil and matter, are mortal error, and error has no creator."

If there are enough demands to open a nursery for infants

CAPITOL NEWS

(Compiled by Neb. Press Ass'n.) Lincoln, Neb.—The legislature this week got around to its first full-fledged debate on the highway problem, and tempers strained and snapped. The perennial attempt of sparsely populated counties for a more generous share of gasoline tax revenue won out on the senate floor after suffering an initial defeat at the hands of the revenue committee.

The committee killed his bill, but Sen. Norris Schroeder, Hoskins, succeeded in raising it. He did so over the eloquent and sometimes bitter protests of representatives from counties which would be hurt by the change.

Under the Schroeder bill, the 10 per cent of collections now distributed on the basis of city population would be allocated on the basis of miles of open road not included in the state highway system. The Hoskins senator has promised amendments dividing the 10 per cent equally on the basis of open road mileage and linear feet of bridge, providing additional funds for cities of more than 5,000 population.

Opponents dub the proposed change "legalized larceny." They concede their counties receive more money, but they say the heavier traffic and resulting wear and maintenance costs take care of the larger allocations. They complain the less populous areas are not willing to raise their road money by taxation, as is done in more heavily populated areas, but resort instead to this "steal."

Proponents contend they share in paying the gasoline taxes which maintain state highways. Under the present allocation, the densely populated areas enjoy double collection, they said.

The bill now is on general file. Its progress through the unicameral is expected to be stormy.

But another proposed change in highway procedure was defeated. Sen. John McKnight, Auburn, wanted the state to maintain city and town streets used as state highways. His bill to this effect was killed in committee, and he appealed to the legislature to revive it.

He said municipalities cannot afford to maintain the streets, worn by heavy through traffic, under the maximum three-mile during the Mass hours on Sundays, arrangements will be made to provide a room to serve as a nursery and a responsible person will be employed to take care of infants while the parents attend Mass. property tax allowed by the law. But the unicameral refused to go along with the lawyer from Auburn. Senators generally conceded the problem calls for a solution, but they did not want to saddle the financially hard-pressed highway department with the $750,000 added cost. The truck-weighting bill has been stripped by its introducer, Sen. Dwight Burney of Hartington, but so far it has managed to withstand attempts to kill it. The bill now provides that the highway department may set up two scales for weighing trucks suspected of carrying illegally heavy loads.

Sen. W. Halsey, Bohike, Hartington, tried to kill the legislation. He said it is intended to "harrass" truckers, but friends of the bill argued no one who obeys state laws regulating weights has anything to fear from the proposed measure.

The drunken-driver bill continued to weave its hazardous course through the senate. As amended by Sen. Louis Holmes, Grand Island, it now is aimed as much at the drinking driver as at the drunken motorist.

The proposed law now provides the state health department shall set qualifications for persons administering chemical tests to determine whether suspected persons are intoxicated. Evidence of the test would be given extraordinary value in court trial.

This shifts the burden of proof from the prosecution to the defendant—a change Sen. Willard Wilson, Holdrege, contends is contrary to American tradition. He wants other eyewitness testimony to be considered of equal importance.

"The legal hurdle should be placed in front of the man who drinks and drives—he is the greatest peril on the road today," Holmes countered.

The unicameral this week repealed the 1947 "shame" law, requiring counties to publish the names of delinquent property tax payers. It was argued many county officials said the act was impractical, since it required publication of "ghost" names of persons long since moved away from the state. Furthermore, according to the arguments, the law never had the desired effect of shaming the delinquents.

Those who do not pay their taxes need stronger medicine than that, it was said.

Sen. Hugh Carson, Ord, suffered an initial defeat when the judiciary committee killed his bill to ban capital punishment in Nebraska. Committee members decided, by a 5-to-4 vote, there was no popular demand for repeal of the law in effect since Nebraska became a state.

Carson did not accept that argument. He served notice he will try to raise the bill in the legislature. He contends that executions do nothing to deter murders from their grisly work, and are only "revenge and retribution" on the part of society.

20 YEARS A FIREMAN. NEVER AT A FIRE

SAN DIEGO (UPI)—Having completed 20 years as a city fireman, Capt. Julius Kaufman, 45, is now eligible for retirement—and he has never been to a fire on duty.

Kaufman has had only one assignment in his years with the fire department, and that is duty inside the alarm office, dispatching rigs to about 15,000 alarms. He now is chief of that office.

Although he could retire at any time, Kaufman has decided to remain with the department. "I still might get to put out a fire," he grinned.
