COMES BACK TO PAY FOR HIS CRIME

Twelve years ago a man, in another state, facing an indictment for forgery, disappeared, leaving his wife and three children behind him. Police were unable to find him and, after a time, the case was supposed to have some chance to win. forgotten.

The other day, however, the police were surprised when a middle-aged man walked into headquarters and told a surprised desk sergeant that he was surrendering on the twelve-year-old charge. The man said that he had been living in another state, where he made a success as a bin Chovanec and Frank Aschenbrenner D. who, apparently, got away from his crime. For more than a decade, he lived a new life, became successful and nobody apprehended him. Nevertheless, the mysterious still, small voice, of which most of us have heard, continually dinned into his consciousness the guilt of wrong-doing and the necessity of paying for his crime.

The learned professors, the psychologists and the theologians will try to point TWENTY YEARS AGO Certainly, there was something inside of him which amounted to more than the guilty knowledge that accompanies most of the individuals who commit errors that the State considers criminal. What it is and why it acts on one man's intelligence and not on another's, offers an interesting area for exploration in our quest of understanding human beings.

The bedroom, it seems, was occupied by a woman who screamed. The man quit his work, grabbed his gun and fired at the fleeing man, hitting him three times.

There is no reason, we presume, to doubt the accuracy of the statement made by the wounded man, or his interest in architecture. Nevertheless, if any of our readers are interested in the same subject, we would suggest that they restrain their curiosity and avoid peeking into windows in the late hours of the night.

Successful Parenthood MRS. CATHERINE CONRAD EDWARDS

DID you see a movie called "I Remember Mama"? If so, you'll recall that there was a lot of wisdom in it about happy family life. One of the best scenes was an evening with the elderly gentleman boarder, when he read aloud to the family. The picture of the children-and Mama and Papa too-sitting in a spellbound circle around the dining room table, drinking in every word, is one that will remain long with everyone who saw it.

How many of us have listened to stories read that way? How many of us have a family reading circle today? It used to be a happy custom in American families. There's something warm and intimate about an evening spent together, children and grown-ups, listening to a good reader reading good books.

We'll find that these heroes of American history expressed many ideas that apply to our lives today. It might be a good thing to point this out to our boys and girls-how stirring experiences in the past apply to modern times. For example, the thoughts of many of our heroes have become the ideals of the nation. Here are a few of them:

Thomas Jefferson said: "I am ready to say to every human being, thou art my brother,' and to offer him the hand of concord and amity." And Abraham Lincoln said: "Those who deny freedom to others deserve it not themselves." And Theodore Roosevelt said: "Americanism is a question of spirit, conviction and purpose, not of creed or birthplace." And 'way back at the beginning, George Washington said: "Happily, the government of the But let's be sure the books are United States gives to bigotry no
