Select Your Best Plants To Mature in Garden Row

Thin out excess plants gradually, and allow the best plants to live, using discards for table when possible.

Thinning out the plants that come up from the seed you have sown may give you an emotional shock. In fact, some gardeners just can't bring themselves to do it, and in consequence their plants are so crowded none can develop full size and vigor, and the crop is reduced in quality as well as quantity.

There is no way to get a full stand in a row without sowing extra seeds; and the home gardener is well advised to do this. He may look upon the task of thinning out as an opportunity, which permits him to select the finest plants to develop and inferior ones to be eliminated.

For best results, thinning should be done in stages. In the case of a crop which grows best when the plants stand six inches apart, do not at first thin it to one plant for each six inches. There are two reasons for this:

First, many vegetables, such as carrots and beets, are most delicious when half-mature. By thinning at first only enough to insure that each plant stands well alone in the row and then allowing them to grow awhile, many will soon reach the stage when they can be harvested for the table.

Second, it is foolish to discard all excess plants prematurely when accidents, insects or disease may destroy many which are left. If thinning is done by stages as the plants grow, they will finally stand at the optimum distance from each other, and there will be small chance of vacant spaces in the row.

Lettuce plants, thinned to stand an inch apart, will soon reach a size when alternate plants can be removed to make a salad; and this process may be continued until the spacing is right for the remaining plants to mature.

Carrots may be thinned the first time when they are as thick as a pencil; and a dish of the thinnings will give those who have never eaten such tiny carrots before, a new idea of this vegetable.

Beets may be allowed to grow until about six inches tall, when their roots have just begun to swell. If thinned out at this stage, the thinnings should be cooked roots and tops together, for a delicious dish.
