MERCHANDISE MART GAINS GOODWILL

THE WORLD'S LARGEST commercial building, the Merchandise Mart in Chicago, belonging to interests headed by former Ambassador to Great Britain Joseph P. Kennedy, is the merchandiser's ambassador to the consumer.

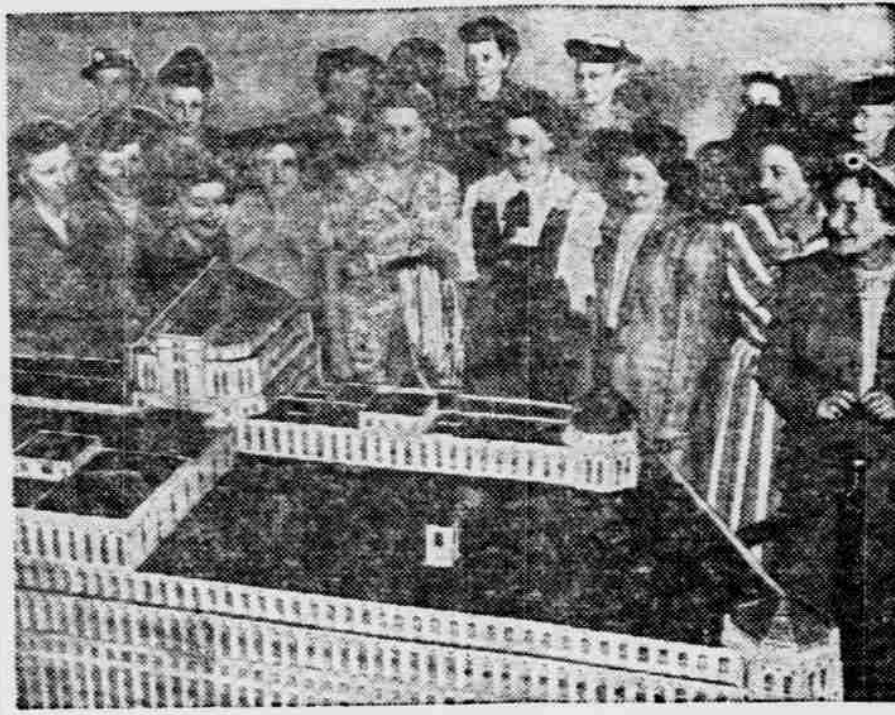

This building gains the goodwill of the tourists and honeymooning couples thronging its corridors daily and instills in them a demand that they carry back to every corner in the U. S. J. for the goods displayed.

Guided tours, started in March, 1948, attract more than 250 persons each day. Guides take visitors from the main lobby backstage to the loading platform, giving them an idea of the huge shipments received by the Mart daily. Then the guides lead their groups into the different exhibits.

Some of the appliances are demonstrated, but no prices can be quoted. The tour gives visitors a peek at what their hometown stores will have for them—handmade glassware, new-fashioned iron waffle irons that cook two waffles at once, modern furniture, some of which has been used on movie sets. Brand-conscious women ask for what they have seen by manufacturer's name when they return home.

Housing 1,100 tenants under one roof, the building contains 2,973,386 square feet of rentable area or 4,023,400 square feet of gross area (83 acres).

The Mart cost approximately $32,000,000 to build. Started in August, 1928, it was completed in January, 1930. The main building is 18 stories high, and the tower rises 25

Guide Dorothy Ganzer, almost hidden by the tower of the model of the Mart, briefs her group of visiting women on some of the features of the building. The roof has been used for helicopter landings. The Merchandise Mart is the only commercial office building in Chicago which has a depot in the building directly accessible to the elevated trains. Every point in the city is automatically within reach. There are over 4,000,000 paid fares yearly.

floors above the street. It covers two entire city blocks or a ground area of 217,000 square feet.

Coal required to heat the Mart's rooms and 7 1/2 miles of corridors would keep warm for a winter a town of 25,000 population. Twenty-six high speed elevators travel 450 miles per day in the Mart carrying 20,000,000 passenger rides per year. The Mart has its own railroad service, docking facilities, taxi station, and police force of a chief, 22 policemen and five traffic officers.

The building has also 30 retail stores, a bank, a post office, a Railway Express Agency, a drug store, restaurant facilities, railroad, airplane and steamship ticket offices and NBC studios.

A freight train, 17 miles long, containing 2,500 cars, would be necessary to carry the goods on permanent exhibit in the Mart.
