

New Head for Missouri River Improvement

Colonel Henry J. Hoefler arrived in Omaha Friday, July 15, to begin his duties as the new Omaha District Engineer for the Corps of Engineers.

After a conference with Brig. Gen. Samuel D. Sturgis, Jr., Missouri River Division Engineer, Colonel Hoefler immediately began a study of the river development and military functions for which he will be directly responsible in the Omaha District. The district comprises roughly two-thirds of Nebraska, the western part of Iowa and the major portion of South Dakota. He succeeds Col. Louis W. Prentiss who has been assigned as Division Engineer of the Southwestern Division with headquarters at Dallas, Texas. Lt. Col. Loren W. Olmstead, Executive Officer, has been acting Omaha District Engineer since the departure of Col. Prentiss several weeks ago.

A veteran of the North African campaign in the last war where he served with distinction, the new District Engineer has served with the Corps of Engineers in many assignments, both civil and military, since his graduation from West Point in 1927. This includes considerable experience in flood control and river development.
