September 7th Freshman Day At University

LINCOLN, Neb.—Wednesday, Sept. 7, will be "D Day" at the University of Nebraska for some 1,800 incoming freshman students.

It is then that the University's student health center will begin a two-day run of physical examinations for incoming students. All new students, transfers as well as freshmen, will receive a general physical examination.

To keep waiting lines at a minimum, the health center, directed by Dr. Samuel I. Fuenning, is scheduling the examinations on an appointment basis and notifying freshmen students by mail. In addition to the center's own staff, about 50 doctors and technicians from the University of Nebraska Medical College will come from Omaha to assist.

Counseling and guidance examinations, designed to help students learn their academic strength and weaknesses, will be held Sept. 8 and 9, again on an appointment basis. The tests are under the direction of Dr. Warren R. Baller.

On Friday afternoon, Sept. 9, freshmen students will meet at the Coliseum for brief orientation and introduction to Chancellor R. G. Gustavson, deans, and officials. Dr. George W. Rosenoff, director of admissions, will preside. Following the general session, group orientations will be held by colleges.

Freshmen will register for classes with assistance from their faculty advisors on Monday, September 12. The work will be done on appointment basis to avoid waiting lines. Most advanced students who are returning to the University completed their registrations in May. University classes open Thursday, September 15.

All veteran students whose University work is financed through the Veterans Administration are slated to be on the campus September 13 and 14 to clear their fees with V. A. representatives.

Engineers Reveal Indian Burial Ground

The U. S. Army Engineers while at work removing earth from the crest of Queen Hill south of Plattsmouth, Thursday, revealed a burial place of the Omaha and Otoe Indians that one time, many years ago, established their villages and burial places along the river bluffs.

The Indian mounds were revealed when the bulldozers of the Engineers scraping off the earth discovered the graves that had been there for perhaps several hundred of years, long before the coming of the white man to the Missouri river in this part of the west.

The discovery was made by Lenem Adkins, in charge of the dirt removal and Leonard Brothers of the Engineers office, the matter was at once reported to Dr. G. H. Gilmore of Murray, noted authority on the Indian burial places. In past years Dr. Gilmore and workers from the University of Nebraska have uncovered many of the ancient villages long buried beneath the soil.

Dr. Gilmore hastening to the scene discovered that there was a large number of the skeletons on the scene of the uncovering, the place being apparently a communal burying ground of some of the tribes of the early Indians.

In discussing the form of burial Dr. Gilmore states that this is the same type of burial that was revealed at many places, was a common practice of the Algonquin Indians in the past.

The bodies are exposed until the flesh is removed, then the bones are gathered and placed in a common burial spot, this type of burial is one in which the different bones are each deposited together, instead of the entire skeleton, legs, arms and various other bones are each placed in groups and deposited in the burial plots similar to that uncovered by the Engineers.

This type of burial was practiced hundreds of years ago Dr. Gilmore states, revealed by the research in the eastern states where the earlier tribes of Indians lived.

Where the burial ground was revealed was surveyed by Col. Thomas Patterson in 1856 who reported in his notes that the place was a burial spot for the Indians.

Wehrbeins Have 2,750 Mile Auto Tour

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wehrbein and Mr. and Mrs. John F. Wehrbein have recently returned from a trip covering ten states and a distance of 2,750 miles. Their first stop was at Hannibal, Missouri, where they visited Mark Twain's cave and museum. At Indianapolis they had a short stop and visited Russell Utt, a postal employee and former army buddy of Fred. From there they went to Circleville, Ohio, where they spent the night with Mr. and Mrs. Jack Heeter, Mrs. Heeter being the former Florine Schaefer of Nebraska.

From Circleville they drove to Parkersville, West Virginia, where they visited the Belle Newlon family; Mrs. Newlon being a sister of the late H. T. Patton and aunt of Mrs. John Wehrbein; some three days were spent there and in nearby vicinity visiting the various relatives, attending family reunions and enjoying the scenic beauties of that locality.

After leaving Parkersburg they drove on east to Elkins, West Virginia, a former location of Fred's while in the service. From Elkins they drove on into the Shenandoah Mountains seeing Seneca Rocks at the mouth of the Seneca, also went through the Seneca caverns. They then crossed the Shenandoah Valley and mountains and reached the scenic Skyline Drive of the Blue Ridge Mountains in the Shenandoah National Park. They continued on down south on this drive viewing the beauties of "those Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia."

After leaving the mountains they stopped at Bunea Vista, Virginia, another of Fred's army locations, then continued on down to Natural Bridge, Virginia, one of the "seven wonders of the world." They spent the night there, witnessed the pageant and showing of the bridge by huge floodlights, all enjoying it immensely.

Leaving Natural Bridge they stopped at Lexington, Virginia, where the Washington and Lee college is located, next they stopped at White Sulphur Springs, West Virginia, a gorgeous resort and noted for its mineral pools, etc. Hawks Nest State Park in West Virginia, was visited, their next stop at Charleston, West Virginia, where they drove through miles of "smokeless" coal mining regions.

They then came into Kentucky and were much impressed by the beauty of that famous bluegrass country and stopped along the Calumet plantation, considered the finest of its kind in the world and where many movies are made.

The party enjoyed driving through the tobacco region where acres and acres of the tobacco is grown and the site of the tobacco sheds and warehouses.

Leaving Kentucky they came through southern Indiana, Illinois and Missouri, where they spent an evening at St. Louis, near Lambert, St. Louis municipal airport where they watched the huge airliners come and go. From there they drove through Kansas, Missouri and home, finding the crops good all the way through on the trip. They couldn't help but observe how "weedless" the entire drive seemed to be, how beautiful and well kept the highways were, how few towns had parking meters and how many people were unemployed.

Since returning, Fred has been quite ill the past week with blood poisoning.
