PROPAGANDA OF VILLIFICATION

It is rapidly becoming an accepted method of American propaganda to magnify trivial matters and to repeatedly denounce individuals and measures upon the theory that if enough noise is made, the public will be convinced that something is wrong.

This seems to be the tactics of many pressure groups and some individuals. It cannot be successfully combatted except by those in a position to know the true facts and, only then, if these individuals have the intelligence to present the facts and the courage to defend the individual or measure unjustly assailed.

In a government, like that of the United States, in which the people are represented by those elected by them, there is a need, it seems to us, for the people to have some faith in their elected representatives.

Certainly, it would be dangerous if one man, whether in Congress or out of it, could, by persistent attacks upon the integrity, loyalty and intelligence of a public official, create a situation in which the individual will be sacrificed, regardless of the conviction of the majority that he is a good official.

Undoubtedly, many officials have been put on the rack of public opinion and crucified by the insistent propaganda of a wew vociferous critics. Finally, even the friends of the individual, and the individual TEN YEARS AGO himself, come to the conclusion that the good of the operation requires the elimination of the individual.

We do not agree with this theory, which is based solely upon the possible adverse political effect of the false propaganda. The fact is that integrity in public affairs requires that a just, loyal and efficient public service be supported and that the responsible authorities stand to any man unjustly accused.

In the long run, the propaganda makers will learn that their tactics are not successful. WHY TRY TO GET THE VOTERS OUT?

In nearly every election, there is an organized attempt to persuade the voters to register and to participate in the election at hand. The consequence is that a large number of voters put their names on the books and go to the polls without having much interest in the issues at stake in the election.

We question the benefit to be gained by the republican form of government in the mass herding of citizens at the polls. There is no virtue in the size of the vote east. It would be much better, in our opinion, to permit voters to follow their inclination as to registering and as to voting.

It can hardly be argued that a voter, lacking the interest necessary to spur him or her to qualify for the ballot box, is apt to become suddenly endowed with wisdom at the polls. It might be much better to permit elections to be decided by those who take an interest in government, are oconcerned with the issues at hand and prepared, as good citizens, to participate intelligently, in the election.

This view runs counter to that of professional politicians and do-good reformers. It follows the common-sense experience of practically every organization controlled by its members. On some questions, there is only slight interest taken by the members and on others, there is a large
