League Palace Hums With UN Activities

By DUDLEY ANN HARMON
United Press Staff Correspondent
GENEVA (U.P.)—The palace of the defunct League of Nations, acres of building completed just before the League collapsed, is today the scene of more international conferences than ever before.

The $10,000,000 palace of stone and marble is now the crowded European headquarters of the United Nations. It is more crowded than during the League's palmiest days.

Earlier this year harassed UN officials even considered adding a "skyscraper" to the building to house overflow agencies. They withdrew their plan after the Swiss objected that the 12-story tower planned would be a regrettable "American" innovation which would ruin their landscape.

Some 1,250 people work in the palace today, compared to about 400 in normal League periods. During big conferences, their advisers increase the number to 2,500. More than 1,000 meetings took place here in the first eight months of 1949, which compares favorably with the number held at Lake Success during a similar period.

Outwardly Unchanged
Pre-war tourists who remember the stately League building, set in a park overlooking the lake would find it outwardly unchanged.

The same golden sphere of the Zodiac, a gift of the Woodrow Wilson Foundation, stands on the lawn beneath huge cedars of Lebanon. The same peacocks—or their descendants—roam the vast lawns and flowerbeds. Buses filled with sightseers still drive up hourly.

Inside the building the visitor is struck by the predominance of the American accent. The United States never joined the League. Today, Americans outnumber the other nationalities in Geneva.

The European headquarters of the UN and several specialized agencies fill the palace to overflowing. The International Refugee Organization, the World Health Organization, the Economic Commission for Europe and the United Nations Relief for Palestine Refugees have headquarters here.

UNESCO Meets
The UN Economic and Social Council, one of the major bodies of the UN, has held its summer session in Geneva twice and will do so again next year.

The palace's assembly hall, which seats 2,000 people, used to house the famous League assembly. Today it is the scene of ILO's annual conferences. WHO meets here every other year.

A world conference drew up three conventions on freedom of information here last year. The UN Palestine Commission wrote and signed its famous report recommending partition in Geneva in 1947.

Nearly 1,000 delegates representing 23 of the world's largest trading nations carried out the greatest tariff negotiations in history at a six months conference here in 1947.

The most glamorous room in the palace, the former League Council Chamber, with murals by the Spanish painter, Jose Maria Sert, is closed most of the time. This seems to old-times here symbolize of a certain loss of glamour by Geneva in the post-war days.

Group Visits County Attorney

County Attorney Walter Smith, assisted by his partner, Harold Lebens, had a field day Wednesday when they took Boys and Girls County students through their offices reviewing procedures practiced by county prosecutors. This group had a wealth of knowledge to carry back to their respective schools. The group included: Ellen Crawford, Louisville; Kenneth Streich, Murdock; Norma Elliott, Alvo; Esther Jenkins, Greenwood; James Hall, Elmwood; Betty Simonds, Nehawka; Charles James, Union; Richard Norris, Avoca; Keith Bodaway, Eagle; Dick Tincher, Plattsmouth.—Journal Staff Photo.

though Keith Neville, Nebraska's World War I governor, was only 32 when first elected; and Thomas B. Cuming and J. Sterling Morton, acting governors of the territory, were mere boys of 26 when first appointed.

Governor Nance was born at La Fayette, Ill., March 30, 1848. He enlisted in the 9th Illinois Cavalry when only 16 years of age and fought with the regiment in numerous Civil War battles. After the war, he began the study of law at Knox College in Galesburg, Ill., and though he left before securing his degree, he was admitted to the bar of Illinois in 1870, at the age of 22.

Shortly thereafter, the young man responded to the call of the West, removing to Nebraska, where in 1871 he took a homestead in Polk County. For a while he tried combining the law and agriculture, but his legal work prospered to such a degree that he decided to give it his full time, moving to Osceola where he opened an office.

Indicative of the rapidity with which young Nance established himself in his new home was his election to the state house of representatives in 1874, despite the fact that he had been in the state only three years and was only 26 years old. He was re-elected in 1876 and was chosen speaker of the house of representatives. Also during 1876 he served as chairman of the Nebraska delegation to the Republican national convention in Cincinnati.

The next honor to be heaped upon the young man's head was his nomination for the governorship by the Republican party in 1878. He defeated W. H. Webster, the Democratic nominee, by better than a two to one majority. He was re-nominated by acclamation in 1880, defeating former Senator Thomas W. Tipton in the general election.

Governor Nance's administration was relatively tranquil. The state was beginning to shake off the effects of the bitter depression which had threatened to stunt its growth in the middle Seventies, and was moving into one of its greatest periods of prosperity and growth. The Governor contributed to stability by a conservative and economical administration of the state's affairs.

At the expiration of his second term, Governor Nance, still not 35 years old, "retired" to his law practice at Osceola. A few years later he removed to Lincoln, and then to Chicago where he engaged in handling railroad stocks and bonds. He died Dec. 7, 1911.
