State Patrol Urges Safety On Highways

LINCOLN, Nov. 12—Speeding arrests and warnings made by Nebraska Safety Patrolmen reached a peak for the year in October, with 389 motorists being arrested and 400 others receiving written warnings, Captain C. J. Sanders, department superintendent, said today.

"There is no place for the speeding driver on the highway," Captain Sanders asserted. "The fast driver endangers his own life and other persons using the highways, and adds unnecessary hazards already increased by an unprecedented number of cars."

"As we enter the first weeks of frost and frigid temperatures, skid wrecks and traffic tie-ups will be on the increase. Knowing that pavement surfaces in the months ahead will at times be bare, then icy or snow covered, let's make sure that we hold our speed down and have our cars under control," Captain Sanders declared.

He added, "State-wide traffic fatalities have been on the decrease, with October having 27 fatalities as compared to 33 for the same month last year, and the 1949 total for the first ten months being 201 as compared to 220 for the same period in 1948. If Nebraska is to maintain this decrease during the danger months of November and December, drivers must start earlier, reduce speed and lengthen distance between cars."

A PEEK at the STARS

EVER WONDER about the birth of a song? With Stan Jones, a Nevada forest ranger, rocking the music world with his stirring ballad, "Riders in the Sky," and Vaughn Monroe's magnificent version of it hitting the million selling mark, we asked Jones as to the song's origin and this was the result: "The legend," he said, "starts down in the southeast part of the country after the Civil War when our first cowpunchers drifted west, most of them ex-Confederate soldiers, and took up cowpunching for a living. The Mexican charros that were already running stock had a legend . . . In other words, if a man was bad most of his life in that wilderness, one day he would see an apparition in the clouds."

"But the cowboys that came out and later turned out a lot of badmen picked it up a little differently and it went something like this . . . If they saw in the clouds on a very dark and stormy day, an apparition of a herd of very wild looking cows, or animals of one kind or another, and behind this group of cattle they saw a band of riders chasing them — that they would actually have seen the devil's herd, and the boys that had been condemned to chase that herd . . . If they did see it they would be condemned for all time with that bunch of boys to catch the devil's herd."

"My part of it for picking it up," Stan continued, "started when I was 14 and a friend and I were out on the range one morning . . . We had gone out to a windmill to pull a pin. On the way back we took a shortcut and curved up a narrow ravine. Looking out on the gale floor and the teeth of the gale was an old cowpuncher . . . When we got to the top the old fellow punched me in the side and said, 'Son, them are the kind of clouds a man sees the riders in.' The next morning I found out that the man had dropped dead that night."
