LINCOLN-Failure of two petition drives last week means that Nebraska voters will find only three issues on their November ballots.

First to admit defeat in their campaign for signatures were the backers of a move to place legalized gambling on the ballot. A few days later, the Nebraska New Car Dealers association tossed in the sponge as it came up to the filing deadline several thousand signatures short of the required 47,500, to get a vehicle tax proposal before the electorate. Dudley and Eugene Gray, along with Glenn Williams, all of Superior, had been at work years. thumping the tubs for the gambling petitions since last fall when James H. Anderson, then the attorney general, announced his statewide crackdown on all

There were two things wrong with this, they say. One is that the clubs, especially the veterans, found that while it might be rough financially, there were a lot of advantages in being rid of the one-armed bandits. The other factor is that none of the clubs wanted to have slot machines if they were also to be in every corner drug store and filling station. Unless the clubs had a monopoly, they didn't want the machines at all.

The Nebraska New Car Dealers association had wanted the voters to consider the substitution of a uniform motor vehicle use fee instead of the present proerty tax method. John B. Quinn, the Lincoln promoter who is manager of the association, said the effort spent in gaining 38,000 signatures would not all be wasted. He filed the petitions with the legislative council and issued a statement, which said, in part:

"These petitions are positive and dynamic evidence of the statewide appeal for the legislature to initiate a similar measure for a vote of the people at the next general election. This would partially solve the general tax problem until a const tutional convention is held."

Quinn said the association had appropriated $5,000 for the petition undertaking.

That means that Nebraskans will vote on these three meas-1. A gasoline tax increase of a penny per gallon. 2. Increased motor vehicle registration fees.
