

REV. ROBERT H. HARPER

Overcoming Temptation (Temptation)

Lesson for November 1: Matthew 4:1-11; John 6:14; Romans 13:12-14; I Corinthians 10:12-13

Memory Selection: James 1:12

IN THE TEMPTATION in the wilderness the devil tried to induce Jesus to compromise with evil that he might more speedily conquer the world. "The devil is an ass." How asinine was his conceit that Jesus would become the dupe of evil, and surrender all conquest. To some men the temptation to compromise is an insidious one. "How can the sinless one be an example in his victory over temptation?" In his perfect union with God men can overcome the wiles of the evil one.

Mark Anthony tells how Caesar refused a kingly crown. But a greater than Caesar refused to be made a king. In this, as in the temptation in the wilderness, he put down the temptation of earthly power.

Paul urged the Roman Christians to cast off the works of darkness and to walk becomingly, in the light of a better day, by putting on Christ and, through his grace, to flee the lusts of the flesh.

James warns men against overconfidence. Let none today feel too strong to be assured by good sense. Sometimes the strongest of men have been taken by the snares of the evil one. Witness the tolerant attitude of many professing Christians toward the use of strong drink and also the indulgence of some of them in intoxicants. It is a man's own fault when he yields to any temptation.
