"I REMEMBER" BY THE OLDTIMERS

From Mrs. H. E. Christman, Scottsbluff, Neb.: I remember when anything good was "boss"—"Oh, we had a boss time!" we'd say, when asked if we enjoyed ourselves . . . when the city fellow was going to play your violin accompaniment and couldn't get a sound out of the organ because he didn't know how to pull out the stops.

From Mrs. Nannie Smiley, Science Hill, Ky.: I remember when I was a little girl my mother used to dry apples and sell them at country stores for two and a half cents a pound. She also sold her hens for 25 cents a piece, and her eggs for five cents a dozen. She bought gingham and print for five cents a yard to make my six sisters and myself dresses. We thought we were fine if we could have a dress made of eight-and-one-third cents a yard goods.

From Mrs. Nettie Millan, Fairmont, W. Va.: I remember when the swain with the two-horse buggy led all the rest; when the sofa was called the sparking bench; when the young man took his girl to church or the theater, she was expected to hold his hat in her lap; when a girl declined the escort of some young man, the gossips had it that she had given him the mitten.

From Mrs. Mary Stewart, Chicago: My mother used to tell about attending a mock funeral in Chicago for President Garfield. An immense black hearse, drawn by eight black horses, heavily draped in a black mesh blanket, with fringe touching the ground, immense black ostrich feathers standing up from their ears, slowly carried a black coffin through the Loop. Several bands played mournful dirges and marches and crowds of crying people watched from every vantage point.
