Protect Trees Against Cankerworm
 LINCOLN—If you had cankerworm trouble on your elm and hackberry trees last year it's a good idea to take precautions against tree pests this spring.

That's advice from Extension Entomologist Robert W. Helm of the University of Nebraska. Early each spring, he says, the adult cankerworm moths come out of the ground. The female doesn't have wings, so she crawls up the trunk of the tree and lays her eggs. Each egg that hatches turns loose a hungry little cankerworm to eat the young leaves from your trees.

Mr. Helm says best preventive measure is to trap the female cankerworms with a sticky band around the trunk. For best results, he says, put the band in place during the first warm days in February or March and keep it sticky until the middle of April.

And, says Mr. Helm, you don't need to disfigure your tree when
