Sgt. Quinnett Hopes No 38th Parallel Crossing

Mr. and Mrs. James G. Quinnett, Sr., have received a letter from their son, Sgt. James Quinnett, Jr., who is now on duty with his regiment in Korea after a short hospitalization leave in Japan. His address is Sgt. James Quinnett, ER 37425110, Co. G, 7th Infantry division, APO 498 care postmaster, San Francisco.
"Dear Folks:
Been with the company several days now and everyone was glad to see me return. We are just this side of the Han river and some units have already crossed—will be moving over in a couple of days. Everything is quiet here and the Chinks seem to have pulled back—Hope we do not cross through Seoul and the 38th.
Seoul hadn't been completely cleared but it appears as though we will reach the 38th without much opposition—from then on, God only knows what will happen.
The news on the radio gives you as much information about the 3rd division as I could and you can follow where we are by that. Hope that everyone is OK and I am feeling fine—it's nice and warm up here and no snow, rains will probably set in later on, but lots nicer than back in January.
I'll close for now—I'll keep writing so don't worry. Loads of love, Jim."

Super Phosphate Application With Oats Pays Off

The use of super phosphate when seeding oats or barley with sweet clover or red clover is a paying proposition in eastern and central Nebraska, according to observations made by University of Nebraska extension soil specialists last year.
Superphosphate has usually helped to establish a good stand of clover and in many cases it has also increased the yield of small grain.
Where the organic matter and nitrogen supply have been kept up by the regular use of manure or legume crops, superphosphate alone may be all that is needed for the oats or barley and clover seedings, said the soils men.
But where the soil is not well supplied with organic matter and nitrogen, it pays to apply a nitrogen fertilizer in addition to the phosphate. Last year, oats were a complete failure on nitrogen-poor soil. On soils with a good supply of available nitrogen, the oats made 25 to 50 bushels, and tests showed a good stand of clover was usually obtained.
Recommended rates of application of superphosphate are 30 to 40 pounds of available phosphate per acre for sweet clover or about twice this amount for red clover. It is most effective if drilled in with the oats. It may also be broadcast and disked in before seeding.

The nitrogen fertilizer should be broadcast when the oats or barley is two to six inches high, at such a rate as to supply 20 to 40 pounds of available nitrogen per acre. Heavier applications of nitrogen are not recommended, as they may cause lodging of the grain crop and thus damage the clover stand, according to the soil specialists.
The extension workers added that the use of phosphate on clover and alfalfa seedings is especially inviting because this practice is eligible for payment under the PMA program.
