Pointers on Chicken Disease Are Given LINCOLN - When there are serious death losses in your flock of new chicks and feed consumption doesn't increase as expected, you'd better get a laboratory diagnosis immediately.

That's advice from Extension Poultryman J. H. Claybaugh of the University of Nebraska. He says, however, that experimental work has definitely proved that rearing chicks away from matured birds will prevent infection to a large degree.

Mr. Claybaugh says that during the first few weeks of the chick's life, he is more susceptible to disease than when he is older.

He suggests planning the brooding building so that it is at least 200 feet away from the laying houses. He also advises not to range chicks on land older birds have used, or soil which has been covered with poultry manure.

Group Discontinues Sunday School The Christian Science Society of Plattsmouth has voted to discontinue Sunday School services. No Sunday school services will be held next Sunday.

The announcement was made by Richard O. Cole, clerk of the local society.

Legislative Bill 237, exempting persons who are recipients of old age assistance in Nebraska and who are residents of Nebraska from buying fishing permits, will not take effect until 90 days after the adjournment of the State Legislature.

Cass County Extension Notes

Pasteurization at Home Simply How to pasteurize milk at home effectively and simply is described in a new circular just off the press at the University of Nebraska.

Authors P. A. Downs and Arnold E. Baragar describe the new method which they developed recently. It consists of using ordinary canning jars with the lid of one fitted with a thermometer, a water bath canner with a rack, a stove and a clock for timing the pasteurization.

The scientists have worked out formulas to use with different types of stoves so that any housewife can do the job. The publication, Extension Circular 999 is available at the county extension office.

Time to Spray Pennygrass

Now is the time to spray for pennygrass, a small winter annual weed, in wheat fields and pastures.

Weed specialists at the University of Nebraska say you can get better kills of the weed when it's small. They recommend using one-fourth to a half pound of 2, 4-D ester per acre. They warn, however, that if the wheat field or pasture contains alfalfa or clover, it should not be sprayed—that is if the farmer wants to keep the legume.

Brome-Alfalfa Pasture Hints Here are six points to be kept in mind in getting the best from brome-alfalfa pastures, according to Extension Agronomist D. L. Gross of the University of Nebraska:

1. Alfalfa will not stand continuous grazing. The pasture must be divided into three or four parts which can be grazed in rotation.

2. Brome-grass alone soon becomes stunted in growth and animals don't like it.

3. The danger of bloat is practically eliminated if animals are not turned on the pasture when hungry and when a stack of good straw or hay is available in the pasture.

4. A wilt and cold resistant strain of alfalfa like ranger must be used if the pasture is to maintain itself for several years.

5. Recent studies show that

Grain Demonstration Plots Are Planned

Two small grain demonstration plots are going to be established in Dakota county this spring.

County Agent Art Moseman said they will be located on the Dan Rush farm, between Jackson and Ponca, and on the Sylvester Haase farm, south of Dakota City.

Several varieties of barley and oats will be seeded in each of the plots. Plans are to supply varying amounts of fertilizer to observe results. The Ag-Vet class at Hubbard is cooperating with the extension service in establishing the plot on the Haase farm.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry D. Royal of Lincoln were here Sunday to visit Judge C. L. Graves, father of Mrs. Royal.
