

Company Sues Burglar
NEW YORK—The State Supreme Court has taken under advisement a suit intended to determine whether a safe-cracker is liable to civil damages. The Aetna Casualty and Surety Company brought the suit to recover $707.25 from Stanley Patrick, 33, now serving 15 to 20 years for robbing a safe insured by the company. The company said that amount of damage was done in breaking window grates and the safe.

BETHEL, Vt.—The best attendance record at Whitcomb High School is held not by a student but by a janitor. The custodian, A. R. Goodwin, boasts that in 24 years he never has missed a day from work.

CLEVELAND—A three-year study of industrial injuries conducted by Le Tourneau, Inc., shows that infections suffered by workers cost employers an average of $39.94 a case, according to the Occupational Hazards magazine.

Thirty-Seven Past Presidents Honored

Since D. B. Smith was installed as president of the local Eagles almost 48 years ago, 37 men have held the distinction of heading the organization.

For the first 17 years, Eagles changed presidents in December, but since 1920, elections have been held in April with new officers assuming their duties in May.

Henry Donat was the first Past Worthy President when he was honored with that office for installing officers when the organization began 48 years ago. Smith was the first elective officer, and held the post until December. He then became a past worthy president and Fred Egenberger moved into the active presidency.

But Wm. P. O'Donnell holds the distinction of heading the organization the greatest number of years. O'Donnell first served as president in 1921 and 1922. He also was at the helm in 1944, 1945 and 1948. C. C. Burbridge was president from 1918 to 1920 and again in 1923 and 1924.

William M. Barclay was the first to serve more than one term. He was elected in 1914 and again in 1916.

Through the years, the following have served as president and are now listed on the books as Past Worthy Presidents.

ward a bachelor of science degree in social science. He still plays his trombone and writes for the college paper. And he still wants to become a newspaperman.

Although Tony lost the use of his left eye after an operation in 1944, he did not become completely blind until December, 1948, when four operations in Rochester proved unsuccessful. At first, he says, it was hard to take.

The next four months were the worst of his life. All hope for his sight was gone and he refused to leave his home or mix with friends.

But slowly his confidence began to return. He began taking long walks along Geneva's tree-shaded streets. He renewed old friendships. He learned Braille from a home teacher of the state commission for the blind. By last winter he had become public relations man for DeSales High School in Geneva.

A visit to his former classmates at Niagara last spring renewed his desire to attend college. So, after a visit to Seeing-Eye Guide, Inc., at Morristown, N. J., where he acquired Boots, Tony is picking up the last pieces of the life he thought was ruined when he went blind.

He admits he's a trifle afraid of returning to the world of classrooms and exams. But he wants no special privileges, and it worries him that many of his classmates are shy about approaching him. "Most people don't know how to act," he said. "They think that you want to be left alone."

They don't know how to break the ice. Most of the fellows give me a wide berth. Of course, the priests have been especially helpful."

Blind Student Shows You Can Beat Handicap

Two years ago last June, Anthony Heaney left Niagara University to spend the summer vacation at his home in Geneva, N. Y.

He planned to return to the campus the following year. Instead, he embarked on one of the hardest and most heart-breaking fights of a young person's life. He began a losing battle to save his eyesight.

This fall, 21-year-old Tony finally was back at Niagara as a sophomore. With him is his constant companion, a seeing-eye dog named Boots.

Things are quite different from Tony's freshman year. Instead of pen and notebook, he carries a Braille stylus to class. His books are put on records for him by the American Foundation for the Blind in New York City.

But his ambitions are unchanged. He is still working to
