Korean Truce Terms Are Disclosed By Drew Pearson

The exact terms have never been made public, but the United Nations have cabled Gen. Matthew B. Ridgeway the exact conditions for negotiating a cease-fire in Korea.

This column, however, has obtained a copy of the cease-fire terms. The major points are: 1. The opposing armies shall be separated by a 20-mile demilitarized zone "with the southern limit following generally the line of the 38th parallel."

2. Naval forces shall keep at least three miles from enemy shores, except to keep the supply lines open to U. N.-held islands in Wonsan harbor.

3. Prisoners of war shall be exchanged "on a one-for-one basis pending final settlement of the Korean question."

4. The cease-fire shall be supervised by a United Nations commission with "free and unlimited access to the whole of Korea."

The inside story is that this proposal was supposed to have been offered on June 25, the first anniversary of the Korean invasion. In fact, the final draft was actually awaiting approval by the 16 nations fighting in Korea when Soviet Delegate Jacob Malik got wind of it and jumped the gun. He came out two days ahead with a cease-fire proposal, thereby scooping the United Nations.

What the 16 nations had intended to do was proclaim (1) that the invaders had been driven out of South Korea, hence the military objectives had been accomplished; and (2) that total unification of Korea could be accomplished by peaceful means.

TEXT OF PROPOSAL
Despite the fact that they were scooped by Malik, the 16 nations believe their conditions are sound for implementing a reinforcing or replacement units or personnel, including volunteers, and the introduction of additional war equipment and material," the cease-fire proposal continues. "Such equipment and material will not include supplies required for the maintenance of health and welfare and such other supplies as may be authorized by the cease-fire commission."

"Prisoners of war shall be exchanged on a one-for-one basis pending final settlement of the Korean question."

"Appropriate provision shall be made in the cease-fire arrangements in regard to steps to insure (A) the security of the forces; (B) the movement of refugees; and (C) the handling of other specific problems arising out of the cease-fire, including civil government and police power in the demilitarized zone."

"Cease-fire arrangements will continue in effect until approved by further steps agreed

"All ground forces shall remain in position or be withdrawn to the rear; forces, including guerrillas, within or in advance of the demilitarized area must be moved to the rear of the demilitarized area. Opposing air forces shall respect the demilitarized zone and the areas beyond the zone; opposing naval forces shall respect the water contiguous to the land areas occupied by the opposing armed forces to the limit of three miles from shore. (Exception: Islands held by U. N. troops north of the 38th parallel and within three miles of enemy shore.)"

"Supervision of the cease-fire shall be by a United Nations commission whose members and designated observers shall insure full compliance with the terms of the cease-fire. They shall have free and unlimited access to the whole of Korea. All governments and authorities shall cooperate with the cease-fire commission and its designated observers in the performance of their duties."

"All governments and authorities shall cease promptly the introduction into Korea of any by the United Nations." Note: This cease-fire proposal might have been offered last winter. However, President Truman sent a copy for General MacArthur's approval and the general offered it himself, even using some of the identical language. Coming from MacArthur instead of the United Nations, the Communists pooh-poohed it as propaganda.
