Sagebrush Spraying Said Successful

Spraying for sagebrush control in Nebraska usually will be most effective during June, according to Weed Researcher Neal E. Shafer of the University of Nebraska.

The scientist, who conducted investigations on sagebrush control in western Nebraska, said, however, that stage of growth and rate of growth are more important as guides for the best time for application rather than the calendar.

He said plants should be in full leaf with new growth ranging from four inches to ten inches in length. His investigations showed that treatments on sand sagebrush in the bud stage have been successful where there was enough soil moisture for good plant growth.

The spray was applied by airplane. The research was carried on through a grant furnished by the state aeronautics department.

Legislative Sidelights

tions in which the voters would indicate their choice of the man to be the presidential candidate of their party, plus direct popular election of the president.

Perhaps consideration should be given to amending the Constitution of the United States to do away with the cumbersome nominating convention and electoral college system and inaugurating the direct election of the president and vice president. Domination of the selection of the highest elective officers in the United States and as a result of the administrative policies of the nation by a small inner-circle of politicians would be less likely under such a system.
