Capitol News

LINCOLN—Since 1937—when the present Assistance program was established—Nebraska has paid out more than $178 million to care for its aged, its blind and its dependent children.

That figure was contained in the annual report of the Board of Control to Gov. Val Peterson. The Board supervises administration of the $21 million-a-year agency.
Almost half of the 15-year total, and a similar proportion of today's expense, is footed by the Federal Government.

Since 1937, a total of $9,123,243 has been spent for administering the program. More than two-thirds of this has been spent at the county level.
The amount paid out for assistance in the 15 years is about equivalent to the state's biennial budget for all departments, including assistance.
The assistance bill for the fiscal year ending last June 30 was $19,023,986, with the federal government putting up approximately half of the money.
The case load trend in Nebraska has been steadily downward for five years, while the national trend has been up. In June, 1947, the national case load was 3,342,452 and in June 1951, it was 4,460,202. In Nebraska the total case load declined from 33,135 to 31,487 in the corresponding period.

Nebraska's old age assistance load dropped from 25,241 to 22,696, but the number of dependent children receiving aid rose from 7,436 to 8,055, and the number of blind persons receiving assistance rose from 458 to 732.
Only one state has fewer persons who receive old age assistance. Nebraska's old age assistance rate is 177 per 1,000 persons over 65, compared to 728 in Louisiana, the highest in the nation.
The cost of health service to Nebraska's assistance recipients rose 23 per cent in a two-year period, the board reported.
In the 1950-51 fiscal year, the bill for health service was $1,864,988.

C. O.'s
Although there are only about 125 conscientious objectors in Nebraska, according to State Draft Headquarters records, the eyes of the state have been focused on a group of Menonites in the area in and around Hamilton county.
A delegation of farmers from that section called on Governor Peterson and Gen. Guy N. Henninger, state Adjutant General. Several days ago to protest the C. O. classification given Menonite farm youths who "stay on the farm accumulating wealth and buying land" while other young men of the community are being drafted into the armed services.
Last week a group of Menonites visited the capitol "to promote a better understanding of our position."

The governor told them, "I see no reason your boys shouldn't be drafted and go to Korea and serve in non-combatant capacities, not necessarily menial work."
Spokesman for the group, Willard Gaeddert, a University of Nebraska student, sketched the history of the Menonite faith and recalled the persecution its members had undergone. He said the youths of his church "would jump at a chance to do relief and rehabilitation work."
The governor urged his callers to take the lead in petitioning Congress to appropriate funds for C. O. labor camps like the ones that operated during World War II. The present law provides for such camps but no funds have been allotted for them.

Peterson said, "Your position is very tenable and the laws of the nation recognize it, but you've also got a very practical problem in public relations."
A few nights later, 600 persons attended a meeting in Hampton at which the issue was aired. Purpose of the gathering was to press for a change in the draft law "which permits a segment of our youth to evade the draft under the guise of being conscientious objectors."

Democrats
Nebraska's Democrats have an early start on their annual intra-party squabble.
This year's fuss, like several others since he took office in 1936, centers around Gentleman Jim Quigley, the Valentine lawyer who is the Demo national committeeman.
A group, headed by W. Orville Baldwin of Hebron is seeking to oust Judge Quigley. At a meeting here, reportedly attended by 65 anti-Quigley persons from 15 counties, plans were laid to get Baldwin elected national committeeman.
Meanwhile, Bill Ritchie of Omaha, a former state Demo chairman, who's bitterly anti-Truman, caught the Quigley people with their guard down. He cited two letters that Paul R. Busch of Howells had sent to postmasters over the state, asking their help in circulating petitions for candidates to the Democratic national convention, "at the personal request of Judge Quigley."

Ritchie says such political activity on the part of the postmasters would be a violation of the federal Hatch act.
Quigley said that as soon as he saw the first letter—the one mentioning his name—he asked Busch to withdraw it. So Busch the postmasters again. "I may have asked you to participate in an activity which might be construed as political. Although Judge Quigley gave me permission to his friends, he neither saw nor approved the wording of his letter, so if the suggestion was in error, the mistake was mine."

Nobody had any idea when the Democrats were going to stop fighting among themselves and start fighting the Republicans.

Annual Sessions
A Legislative Council committee, studying the advisability of annual instead of biennial sessions of the Nebraska Legislature, was back this week after a junket to Denver to study the first off-year meeting of the Colorado legislature.
Headed by Sen. Thomas Adams of Lincoln, the group found most of the Columbian State lawmakers liked the idea of getting together every January, especially in the matter of drafting a budget. During the even-numbered years, the Colorado Legislature considers only appropriations and those matters brought before it by the governor.
Nebraska voters, in the 1950 election, turned down a constitutional amendment which, among other things would have provided for annual sessions.

School Lands
The executive board of the Legislative council named Sen. Robert McNutt, freshman legislator from Lincoln, to head a committee to study the school land lease situation in Nebraska.
Sen. Dwight Burney, Hartington, council chairman, said the committee will not study the matter "with the idea of trying to change the decision of the Supreme court whose ruling on land leases last summer has resulted in resale of some 2,000 leases.

Rather, he said, "we are going to have the committee look into possible abuses of land from the conservation standpoint as the result of the present system of releasing the land, and maybe study the administration end to see whether we can iron out some rough spots."
Burney said he fears the present system of releasing under which a piece of school land goes to the highest bidder, "might cause some people to abuse the land from a conservation standpoint in order to get their money back."
