Older Folks Food
It's commonplace nowadays to have a long life. But many men and women who have had 60 birthdays, or 70, or more, aren't as healthy and happy as they might be if they would make a strong ally of food, letting it help in every possible way.
So says a new bulletin, "Food Guide for Older Folks," by the Bureau of Human Nutrition and Home Economics, U. S. Department of Agriculture.
All through life, says the bulletin, you need food that contains protein and minerals — nutrients needed for upkeep of body tissues and bone. Some repair work goes on continually, but if the right materials from food are skimpy, repairs may be shoddy.
Also needed is food supplying many different vitamins. These vitamins together with minerals and protein, make combination teams that keep the body running smoothly, as it should.
A third need is for food to provide fuel for energy and warmth. Every food supplied some calories for this, some more than others. Getting a calorie surplus, which in time leads to overweight, is a frequent problem among older persons, who usually are less active than in earlier years, and need fewer calories.
Warning against food fads and so-called wonder diets, which overemphasize some foods and ignore others that are important, the bulletins point out: "Since food has so much to do all life long, you can never get free from responsibilities for eating the kinds and amounts you need."

Seed treatment started with a shipwreck. A sailing vessel loaded with wheat in 1670 ran aground in a storm near England. The wheat was salvaged, but was too saturated with salt water to be made into flour. Some farmers planted the wheat. The crop resulting had less smut than where other seed was used. For the next 100 years farmers soaked their seed wheat in sea water or sprinkled brine over it. Long Since, other seed treatments have been used. This may be just a sea story, but seed treatment does pay.

U. S. MAKES PROFIT
The government is making a profit out of at least one thing it is doing—this time it's the business of money-making. It's due to what is known as seigniorage—the difference between the metal content of a coin and its face value. The profit last year was $42,936,942, according to a report of Leonard Howard, assistant director of the mint.
TAX REFUNDS
The Internal Revenue Bureau reports that 461 newspapers had helped 41,970 persons collect $2,080,668 in tax refunds during January, by carrying lists of taxpayers to whom refunds were due but who had not collected them, usually because the Bureau could not locate them. However, as of February 1st, refunds totaling $35,634,474 still had not been delivered to 1,176,100 persons.
