Three Fairs To Claim Interest Of Cass 4-Hers

Four-H boys and girls from Cass county are preparing for a three point fair program which will open with the Cass County Fair in late August.
Following that the exhibitors will have entries at the Nebraska State Fair, and they'll wind up the "big-three" at the King Korn Carnival at Plattsmouth.
Competition is expected to be stiff for countians at the Cass County Fair to be held at Weeping Water. Many of the winning exhibitors will then transplant their interests to the state fair.
Livestock exhibits will feature 4-H club activities at the King Korn Carnival. Following the success of last year's calf show and first calf sale, plans are now under way to also conduct a swine show at the Carnival in 1952.
But the wide variety of activities at the three big shows will provide contests in practically all phases of agricultural work. Activities will include farm demonstrations, clothing, crops, beef, dairy, foods, homemaking, poultry, sheep and swine.
The Cass County Fair will be held August 22, 23 and 24; the State Fair is slated August 31 through September 5; and the King Korn Carnival will be held September 17, 18 and 19.
The British are planning to use 500 large windmills as a source of electric power to conserve tight coal supplies.
A public utility company uses 30% of all the fuel burned in New York City.

Crops Drying Is On Increase On State Farms

Crops drying is on the increase in Nebraska.
University of Nebraska agricultural engineers estimate that from 500 to 600 farmers are using drying equipment. The amount is about equally divided between heated air and unheated air systems.
Farmers using the dryers include not only grain growers but an increasing number of dairymen, who have found that artificial drying helps solve the age-old problem of preserving the quality of forage crops.
At first grain farmers considered crop drying only an emergency measure for unusually wet years. Now more and more of them are adopting the system to an every-year practice.
Harvesting with the combine-thresher and the corn picker, with the use of mechanical drying equipment, makes it practical for wheat and corn growers to harvest their grain earlier and handle and store their crops in better condition. When grain is harvested early there is less loss in the field from shattering, too.
Research at the University of Nebraska College of Agriculture is continuing in order to make crop drying even more practical on the farm. Investigators like George M. Petersen of the agricultural engineering department are working on the amount of air flow needed, for example, to determine the most economical size of equipment needed. The engineers are experimenting both with grain and hay.
The dairy department, which buys a large quantity of hay for its herd, has found drying practical for both chopped and baled hay. Sometimes the hay purchased contains too much moisture for safe storage, and Dr. L. P. Kelly, chairman of the department, has found that heated air drying the answer to the problem.
Researchers have found that 10 to 15 per cent more of alfalfa leaves can be saved by stacking chopped hay over a drying system.
Farmers who have been helped by engineers in getting their crops drying program started are using the method as a regular practice, too. Many report the system has paid for itself in the first year of operation.

Control For Red Spider Mites Told

Here is a way to fight those red spider mites which are infesting many evergreen, some rose plants and phlox.
Entomologists at the University of Nebraska recommend a wettable sulphur spray, using two level tablespoons of the material to a quart of water. Three sprayings should be given at intervals of a week. A nicotine sulfate spray also is recommended at standard strength.
When wettable sulphur spray is used, however, it is helpful in controlling rusts and mildew common to perennial phlox.

Southern West Virginia's 30% of all the fuel burned in about 27 million tons in 1951.
