CHILD LABOR

Many of the more than 2,000,000 American boys and girls of school age, now working full or part-time in industry and agriculture, are employed illegally, according to a report of the National Child Labor Committee. While school attendance of 14 and 15-year-old children is at a record high, there are still more than 100,000 children in that age group out of school and employed.
