It Happened In NEBRASKA---

A frontier "family portrait" was a serious thing. Here is a typical family grouping for the Big Event. Head of the family sits with sons and daughters. In this case the wife was dead, so her photograph "posed." Objects of pride—horses, even a sewing machine—were brought out for the occasion, while in the background we see the hired men.

A portrait of today's Nebraska would necessarily include its vigilance against unwise tavern operation. A continuing educational campaign by the brewing industry keeps taverns operating openly, cleanly, and in conformity with the law.
