DEEP DESCENT

A Professor Auguste Piccard recently rode a diving contraption down to a depth of 10,000 feet under the surface of the ocean. It was the deepest descent ever recorded by man, and carried the professor almost two miles under the water.

The Swiss-born scientist reached the bottom of the Tryrrhenian Sea at exactly 10,334 feet. The professor, who was accompanied by his son, required two hours and twelve minutes to make the dive. The two Piccards rode in a small, windowed compartment, which was attached beneath the diving box, and a searchlight in its hull allowed them to see what went on in the inky blackness as they descended.

The noted scientist has now stood on the bottom of the ocean and seen an ocean life no other human has ever witnessed. His record descent will be valuable for scientific reasons but it is a tribute to the 69-year-old scientist himself who once was a famous balloonist. In fact, Dr. Piccard was one of the first to conquer the stratosphere in a balloon and now can accurately be described as an explorer of both the stratosphere and the ocean depths. In other words, one might say he has had his ups and downs.

* * * TRUMAN FAVORS NEGOTIATIONS

Former President Harry S. Truman recently called for a "firm agreement with our allies" to negotiate a solution of current U. S. difficulties with the Soviet Union. In taking this position the former President aligned himself with the 1952 Democratic Presidential nominee, Adlai Stevenson, who also has called for a Big Four meeting.

The Truman speech is another indication of the pressure building up for a meeting with the new leaders of Soviet Russia. Much of the argument in favor of such a meeting is based on the assumption that nothing could be lost, and that possibly some improvement of world tension could be achieved.

Already sentiment in both Great Britain and France is strongely in favor of such a meeting and, in recent days, Indian delegate K. V. Krishna Menon has discussed the possibility of introducing a resolution in the U. N. calling for a Big Four meeting. There has also been a hint that the Soviet Union would favor a conference among the Big Five, as the Soviet press terms them, which group would include the leader of Communist China. The evidence indicates that the United States and Russia are the two key powers which have as yet failed to come out openly in favor of such a meeting. The recommendations of top leaders in the Democratic party that the Administration agree to Big Four talks is sure to have some influence on course of events. While one cannot always predict the course of international relations, it now appears that a Big Four meeting, or some such meeting, is likely to be held either this year or next.

* * * N RESTING MOTHERS

Dr. Earl J. Baker, of Traverse City, Mich., has his own system of providing rest for tired mothers. Each year the doctor invites 25 mothers to spend four days at his 50-acre resort on a Lake Michigan bay. The only requirements are that the mothers leave their families behind and that they do not work while at the resort.

Dr. Baker says he is trying to repay his own mother for a vacation he promised her but never managed to give her before she died. In her honor, he has made the four-day vacation for 25 mothers an annual affair.

He pays the expenses of the mothers to his resort and provides all the luxuries necessary for a vacation. And if the mothers
