Superior Rate To ORC Unit At Inspection

Superior was the rating awarded Company H, 355th Infantry, Organized Reserve Corps at Plattsmouth by an inspector general's committee.

The rating was officially received by Commander Cecil M. Karr at Plattsmouth early this week. It topped the two previous annual ratings of excellent received by the unit.

In tabbing the unit superior, Capt. Gene Crislip, acting assistant inspector general, cited the unit for its superior maintenance and administrative records, excellent condition of supply records and warehousing of equipment, and for training progressing in a superior manner and conducted by outstanding instructors.

The report also pointed out that "it is quite evident that morale of the unit is very high." Capt. Crislip explained that, although a complaint period was held, no complaints were registered.

A few minor deficiencies were noted during the inspection, however, many were a result of the conditions. The inspector general cited the need for storage space and for some building improvements.

Commenting on the inspection, Captain Karr pointed out that the public is invited to view activities of the unit at any time, and extended a standing invitation for individuals to observe the company during its Wednesday night training sessions.

HERE'S THE STORY ON TERMITES
 (FIRST OF TWO ADVERTISEMENTS)

1.—COLONY—

A headquarters is established by the common subterranean termite colony. In the nest or terrain most likely located beyond the depth of frost, live the king and queen nymph—the soldiers—the workers and the immature reproductives.

2.—THE ROYAL COUPLE— (King and Queen)

The normal colony—the queen and king are the only active reproductives and are by other termites. They do not perform any other functions. In some cases they live for 20 or 25 years.

3.—EGGS—

The older the queen gets her production of eggs becomes greater. Sometimes at the rate of thousands daily. The eggs increase in size during the 10 days to a few weeks of incubation. They are carefully tended by the "worker" termites. The nymph hatches directly from the egg.

4.—NYMPH—

The new born nymph must be fed by attendants for 12 to 14 days. The food is re-rigurgitated from the "workers." In this way protozoa (without which termites cannot digest food) are transferred to the nymphs. As it grows and takes up duties in the colony it has a series of moltings called instars. At the final molting it then becomes a worker, a soldier, a supplementary reproductive or a reproductive.

5.—WORKER—

The worker lives for several years after maturity. It's usually a grayish white in color. Having no eyes and being sterile, the workers function is providing food for itself and colony. Usually this food is obtained from wood.

6.—SOLDIER—

The soldier lives about the same life span as the "worker." It differs from other nymphs by having a long armored head and large mandibles. Its soul function is defense against outside enemies—chiefly common ants.

7.—SUPPLEMENTARY REPRODUCTIVE—

To prolong the life of a colony, there are usually supplementary forms present which replace the primary forms, on death. The offspring of supplementary forms is more numerous than those of primary forms because they are polygamous. New colonies are started by the emigration of supplementary forms from another colony.

8.—REPRODUCTIVE—

The reproductive nymph develops short wings about 1/4 inch long and wing pads. The sexual organs develop as the body lengthens slightly. Before leaving the colony the reproductive turns black, the eyes become functional and its wings extend to full limit.

9.—SWARMER—

In the spring, sometimes in the fall, the matured reproductive leave the colony at the same time. The worker termites help them through the emergence tunnels leading from the nest and seal the exit holes after them. The reproductive termites, being poor fliers, flutter in the air several feet and then fall to the ground.

10.—MATE SELECTION—

As soon as a reproductive alights on the ground the wings are pruned off. Many of them are killed at this time by birds and predatory insects. The surviving males search for mates and approach numerous females before selecting a compatible mate.

11.—COLONIZATION—

The new united couple then burrow into the ground to the moisture line and start their own territory. The queen starts egg laying on a slow basis and during this period the pair must do all their own household work; providing food and caring for the young.

12.—THE PATTERN CONTINUES—

As the queens physical duties decrease the egg production increases. The young nymphs take on more and more of her duties. The queens abdomen gradually extends because of the enlarged ovary condition and she becomes a huge egg laying machine. So the life pattern and the existence of the termite continues.
