REARMAN REARMAMENT DELAYED

U The United States proposal to rearm West Germany within the framework of a European Defense Community has hit another snag, after some years of snaghitting. The Labor Party in Great Britain has decided to allow its members to criticize the officially-endorsed government program permitting West German rearn.ament. Heretofore the Labor Party had officially supported the plan.

program by an overwhelming vote.

While these developments in themselves do not mean that the official British Government policy is changed, they do indicate that the issue is now becoming a hot one in England as well as in France. In the latter country the Foreign Affairs Committee recently postponed again voting on the EDC treaty, which the United States has been pushing for years.

The French fail to relegate this traditional animosity to second place in the present tense world situation even though Communism has long since surpassed German militarism as Europe's, and the world's, greatest danger to peace. Now the British are being divided by leftwing elements on the same issue, and told that once West Germany is rearmed, the Germans will become the menace to peace, a menace greater than that of the Reds.

The folly of this reasoning is to be found in the fact that the Germans hate the Russians more than any other western nation. The Reds still occupy a third of greater Germany, and were always Hitler's number-one enemy, even when the Nazis were fighting both the Reds and the western allies. The case is the same with the Japanese, who are traditional foes of the Russians.

The only sensible policy for this country to follow is to rearm both of its former enemies—and as quickly as possible — so they will be able to play a part in the settlement with Russia when and if it must come. And time could be running out. If France, and perhaps Britain, hesitate any longer on the EDC plan which would rearm West Germany, the United States would be justified in taking independent action to rearm West Germany on its own responsibility.

sad commentary on the effectiveness of the United Nations as a world peace body is seen in the inaction and inability of the U. N. to do anything about the present situation in Indochina. Although a war has been going on in this country for seven years, the United Nations has not yet been able to do anything to stop the fighting.

Since the U. N. has been able to make no significant contribution to the settlement of the war, at present the world's hopes seem to rest on the outcome of negotiations being carried on by several major countries of the world on their own, at Geneva. The first test the United Nations must pass-the same test which that organization faced upon its origination - is the test whether it can enforce its edicts.

If an international body has no police power to enforce its decisions, it is reduced to nothing more than a debating society when the final crisis of a major dispute between major nations arises. U. N. members have not yet been able to create a U. N. police force, and when the United Nations failed to back up its order to Arabs and Jews to end their fighting several years ago, the world body lost prestige all over the world.

In the Korean War, the United Nations was officially active, but it is well
