Legislative SIDELIGHTS...

Every farmer likes to be guaranteed $2.25 per bushel for his wheat. Every farmer would like to be guaranteed $3.00 per bushel, but the price he has to pay for that kind of a protected income is becoming apparent to some wheat farmers.

Politicians of both parties have made wheat growing so profitable that a lot of corn growers, bean growers and hog raisers have turned to wheat. Where wheat was not a profitable crop in many states prior to 90 percent price supports today it is extremely profitable. But the profit of the corn grower, bean grower and hog raiser has been at the expense of the wheat grower of the Great Plains and the Northwest.

"YANKEE CLIPPER" — Yanks' Irv Noren executes what looks like a toe-tip bow to a wildly applauding crowd as a Nellie Fox over-the-fence homer gets by him in a game with the White Sox at Yankee Stadium.

Ninety percent price supports encouraged hundreds of farmers to plant up to 15 acres of wheat even though they had raised no wheat for years. You can ration and limit the right to produce, but you cannot legislate the right to plant without encouraging repudiation at the ballot box. For that reason the number of wheat growers in the nation increases steadily, while those who are best equipped to raise wheat are forced to share their right to produce.

Perhaps there is a lesson for the wheat producer in what has happened to tobacco. Tobacco has had a 90 percent price support for years. In the beginning 90 percent was popular numbers of producers. Since only a certain amount of tobacco can be consumed, the right to produce tobacco had to be rationed so that more producers each year could share in the profits.

The minimum quota for Burley tobacco is nine-tenths of an acre. Since no producer has an allotment of less than nine-tenths of an acre, new allotments for new producers must come from allotments of more than nine tenths of an acre. Today ninety percent of the Kentucky and Tennessee farms producing Burley tobacco have allotments of nine-tenths of an acre. In most communities there the tobacco allotment is the most valuable portion of the farm sale price, being worth $1,000 to $2,000 an acre to farm sale value.

Fifteen acres is the minimum quota for wheat production. The number of 15 acre wheat quotas increases each year ninety percent price supports are maintained. Wheat farmers only need look to the Burley tobacco growers to see the direction their commodity is headed if ninety percent of any high, rigid price support is long continued.

Cash Value of Corn Silage

Farmers wondering about the cash value of their corn silage should ask their County Extension Agent for Extension Circular 131 "Corn and Sorghum Silage" now available at his office.

The circular points out that the cash value of corn silage may be calculated as follows:

The amount of corn grain in well-cared silage is about 4 bushels per ton, and the total digestible nutrient content of the stalk portion of one ton of silage is equivalent to about 340 pounds of mixed hay. A common method of arriving at the price of corn silage is to rate it at one-third the local price of legume hay on the farm.

Silage made from well-matured corn will be 25 to 35 per cent higher in total digestible nutrients and dry matter than silage made from immature corn.
