THE NEW FARM BILL

Passage of President Eisenhower's flexible price support farm bill is one of the Administration's greatest legislative victories. If one will think back a few months, it will be remembered that in January chances for a flexible price support system were considered nil.

Even as late as April, and May, Congressmen on both sides were confidently predicting they would extend rigid price supports at ninety per cent, and there seemed little to indicate they were wrong. The President's forces, however, worked slowly but steadily, and finally emerged with a victory in the House, reducing supports from a fixed ninety per cent to a flexible eighty-two and a half per cent to ninety per cent .

In the closing days of the Senate's session, the same proposal was adopted, by a narrow decision of 49 to 44. Had any three of the ten Democrats, who joined thirtynine Republicans passing the measure, switched sides, the President would have been defeated.

President Eisenhower himself has called passage of the new farm legislation a sweeping victory for his administration. It represents a tactial victory in Congress, since formidable opposition had to be overcome before the bill passed both Houses.

The lone remaining question is now whether the bill will be a political asset or liability to the administration, and whether it will result in better or worse conditions for the farmer. November's elections may give a clue as to the political wisdom of the administration's farm program.

We believe the new farm program will not better the farmer's plight and that the President's farm program will prove a liability. It will take effect January 1st, and it may be until the Fall of 1955 before the result is completely obvious.

TUDEBAKER WORKERS ACCEPT CUT

) The automobile workers at the Stude-2: baker Corporation's South Bend, Indiana, plant recently voted to accept a sizeable pay cut rather than force the company to close down its plant.

The company had warned workers to accept the cut or see the automobile-producing plant closed down. The workers had at first refused to accept the pay cut, and Studebaker had notifed the union that it was terminating its contract. Studebaker also said it was paying wages higher than the average in the industry and that it could not continue to pay such wages and remain in a competitive position. The company had also only recently released a statement showing it had suffered heavy financial losses in 1954. By accepting the cut, even tardily, the automobile workers in South Bend will save the Studebaker plant and retain jobs for themselves which would otherwise have disappeared. It was the only solution, and any other course by the auto workers would have been one of blindness and folly. Union leadership in this case has consistently urged the workers to accept the pay cut, although they did not at first agree. What narrowly missed being a labor -tragedy has been averted but the seriousness of the squeeze in the automobile industry is unmistakably clear. No doubt the automobile workers in South Bend, Indiana, are not aware that the economic recession is over and such situations, if magnified on a broad scale, will certainly be reflected at the polls in November.
