Top Quality Eggs Sold on Grades Boost Returns
Nebraska egg producers can increase their present returns from eggs by producing top quality eggs and selling them on a graded basis says Paul C. Clayton, extension marketing specialist.

At the present time there is a shortage of top quality eggs even with the surplus of "undergrades." This is reflected in the large spread between the price paid for "undergrades" or current receipts and top quality eggs he says.

Last week's issue of Poultry and Egg Market News Service reported producers were receiving from 12 cents a dozen for "undergrades" to 45 cents a dozen for AA-Large eggs. Of course, these are extremes, says Clayton. The 45 cents a dozen for AA-Large eggs is available only to producers in the North Platte-Lexington area in the western part of the state.

Many of the Nebraska producers now receive 20 to 25 cents a dozen on the current receipt market could get 10 to 15 cents more a dozen by producing top quality eggs and selling on a graded basis. Clayton believes. Although a graded or quality market is not available in all areas of the state, it would pay the producers of quality eggs to do a little "shopping around" for one of these markets, he concludes.

Silage Versus Legume Hay For Dairy Cows

Will dairy heifers and cows grow and milk as well when they are fed only silage as when they receive silage and alfalfa or red clover hay?

This is the question uppermost in the minds of many dairymen this year who have available large quantities of silage and limited quantities of hay says C. W. Nibler, extension dairyman at the College of Agriculture.

He reports that many experimental stations and the Department of Agriculture have fed dairy heifers and cows silage as the sole roughage with satisfactory results. Where cows have been fed only silage, they have eaten about 6 pounds for every 100 pounds live weight.

Silage as the sole roughage has definite disadvantages, compared to silage and high-quality hay. Silage is generally lower in Vitamin D than sun-cured hay, and may be lower in Vitamin A. Silage is relatively low in protein, and therefore more protein should be supplied in the grain ration if legume hay is not available. Silage is low in calcium and, if fed alone, should be supplemented with a mineral like steamed bone meal that contains both calcium and phosphorus. Because silage is high in moisture, it is necessary to feed large amounts in order that animals receive sufficient dry matter.

Silage made from well matured corn will be 25 to 35 per cent higher in total digestible nutrients and dry matter than silage made from immature corn. Silage from corn harvested at milk stage or earlier supplies about 13 pounds of total digestible nutrients per 100 pounds forage, while silage from well matured corn will furnish about 18 pounds total digestible nutrients.

The feeding value of sorghum silage is generally less than that of well cured corn, because sorghum silage is not so rich in grain. Also, cattle do not chew the seed in sorghum silage as thoroughly as they do corn grain.

It would be best and it is advisable to feed hay with silage; but if hay is not available or if too high in price, dairy heifers and cows will successfully grow and produce on silage as the sole roughage.

It is more difficult to secure maximum performance from dairy animals receiving silage alone than silage and hay.

BANK DEPOSITS
Deposits in the nation's 528 mutual savings banks passed the $25,000,000 level for the first time at the end of June and were well on the way to a total of $26,000,000. Deposits rose $1,042,000,000 in the first half of the year, or 3 per cent more than they increased in the corresponding period of 1953. A good part of the gain is attributed to the fact that interest-dividend payments were 30 per cent greater than they were a year ago.
