Eight Amendments
Nebraska voters will be asked on November 2 to decide what they want to do about eight Constitutional Amendments.

The 1953 regular session of the Nebraska Legislature considered a number of Constitutional amendment proposals of which three survived. These are the first three items on the General Election ballot.

Five of the amendments resulted from the Special Session of the Legislature in the Spring of 1954. Four of the five were recommended to the Special Session by the Legislative Council tax study committee; and one was introduced by a member of the Legislature.

The following is a brief summary of the eight amendments. The number preceding each amendment indicates its position on the ballot. The first three were approved by the 1953 regular session of the Legislature.

1. Permits the Legislature to make salary adjustments for state officials more often than once in eight years.

2. Permits the establishment of a State Board of Educational Lands and Funds.

3. Eliminates the requirement that members of executive boards and commissions must reside at the seat of state government.

4. Permits the Legislature to prescribe standards and methods for all classes of tangible property assessment.

5. Permits the appointment of county assessors and independent county boards of equalization and assessment.

6. Permits the Legislature to determine assessment policy for household goods.

7. Prohibits the state from levying property tax for state purposes in case a sales or income tax is enacted.

8. Permits the Legislature to make changes in the procedures of the State Tax Commissioner's office to set up a commissioner or tax commissioner as the department executive.

The seventh amendment was introduced by Senator Herbert Duis, Gothenburg; and it is the only amendment on the ballot which writes into the State Constitution a limitation on the actions of the Legislature. The other seven amendments actually increase the responsibility of the Legislature for dealing with basic problems. None of the amendments bind the legislature to take action, but they do open hitherto closed doors in giving the lawmakers authority to deal with problems.

Harvest Corn Early For Least Loss

To reduce to a minimum the loss of corn in the field make arrangements to harvest it as early as possible, says M. L. Mumgaard, extension engineer.

When corn reaches the level of moisture safe for cribbing, the "normal" field losses increase at a rate of about three per cent per week for a period of about four weeks with the loss thereafter increasing at a rate of about one per cent. This loss includes both shelled corn and the ears dropped. A normal harvest generally starts at a kernel moisture of 20 per cent.

The agricultural engineers at the University of Nebraska suggest this way of checking up on this field loss of corn. Twenty kernels per hill for a three and one-half feet row means a loss of one bushel of shelled corn per acre. Just measure a length of three and one-half feet, using the rows of drilled corn for the sides of your square. Count the kernels and divide by 20 to find the number of bushels lost per acre.

For ear loss, step off 190 feet along a row and pick up all the ears between two rows. The weight in pounds will equal the ear corn loss in bushels per acre. Add the kernel and ear loss to find the total loss in the field. For the best possible estimate, repeat this procedure at several points in the field and average the totals.
