It Happened In NEBRASKA---

Nebraska's first railway depot was perhaps as much a sight-seeing point as it was a take-off point for trains. Indians, buckskin-clad plainsmen, farmers, gamblers, businessmen, ladies—ALL could be seen daily at Omaha's first depot in 1868.

In pioneer days, Nebraska's taverns were colorful, too (too much so). But times have changed. Today our taverns are quiet, respectable businesses which have, in recent years, earned the good will of all.

Could this be the oldest used car trade-in? Ray Wysel, local Studebaker-Packard dealer, got this 1905 Reliable Dayton as a trade-in on one of the last remaining Tucker experimental cars in the country, recently. The trade was made with Maynard Buchanan, Omaha, a collector of old cars and father of a former Plattsmouth high school teacher. The Dayton was built in Chicago and carries serial number 200. It is in good condition, has been put in top running order and has appeared in parades at Omaha, Offutt, Bellevue and Plattsmouth. ## Turkey Crop Still Puzzle to Experts

LINCOLN — The size of the 1955 turkey crop is still something of a puzzle to the experts, says Glenn H. Thacker, extension poultry specialists at the University of Nebraska College of Agriculture.

Growers intentions as of the year were to raise about the same number of heavy turkeys and 11 per cent fewer small birds. Indications are that from 5 to 10 percent more heavy breeder turkeys are being held, but a smaller number of light breeders are on hand.

In view of the heavier numbers of breeders in flocks, the lighter hatching and setting records are puzzling. Thacker says. Possibly some more breeders than usual may have been marketed, and more breeders may have been left to come into lay naturally without lights.
 The potential for a heavy turkey crop in 1955 which would be as large or larger than the 1954 crop is still with us, he says. Much will depend on what happens in the next 30 to 60 days in the heavy production areas such as California, Minnesota and Texas.

Marciano and Cockell have signed for a 15-rounder in May.
