Chief, Two Officers Quit Police Force Amid Hot Shouting A schism which had been widening almost daily between Plattsmouth's mayor and chief of police ended in a sudden blowup Thursday which left the police department with only one-fourth of its officers. Chief of Police Lawrence Chappell, and officers, John Hobscheidt, veteran

Richard Winn and Delbert Green departed from the force after an unofficial council meeting Thursday afternoon. They had notified Mayor Leo Meisinger, through Councilman Jim McMillian, that if certain things were not rectified, they were quitting at 6 p.m. Thursday. When relayed the word, Meisinger said they were through.

* Whether the men were fired or resigned brought different answers depending upon which side was asked. Apparently they were fired and quit at the same moment. Final blow in a series of events came after Mayor Meisinger took a look at the mileage record on Plattsmouth's new police car and told the chief to cut down on the daytime mileage.

Meisinger told an unofficial council meeting that he found only five miles posted on the book for the night force and much more for the day force. He thought the night men should do more prowling and the day men less iou riding.

When Chappell let the police to make an arrest, Mayor Meisinger objected hotly and the police force members made their ultimatum. Meisinger told the council he did not want a private car used since there would be no radio contact. The council, in a hurried but unofficial meeting Thursday afternoon, tried to heal the breach, but with Meisinger differing with Chappell and Winn in loud, angry voices, they got nowhere. Meisinger told the council that the mileage record was one of the main points of difference but he also ex-pected the chief to take the detailed supervision of the other three members of the force off his hands, and Chappell had not. Chappell told the council Meisinger was always interfering and the officers objected to having to work for two bosses. Chappel and Winn said they chiected to Meisinger telling them where to eat while on
