Caravan Tells Corn Story

WEeping WATER — "Better Crops — More Profits" is the theme of the agronomy section of the Cornhusker Caravan, a large agricultural exhibit scheduled to visit Weeping Water Feb. 25.

The crops section of the Caravan will have exhibits on crop varieties and pasture management, crop drying, farm building construction, crop insect control, and soil fertility. The exhibits will be accompanied by agricultural extension specialists from the University of Nebraska who will be there to answer questions and visit with farmers about their individual crop-production problems.

New to the Caravan this year is a panel on crop varieties and pasture management titled, "A Winning Combination." The panel suggests that a combination of improved pastures, pest control, soil fertility and quality seed is the way to more profits. Rotating cylinders on the panel list recommended crop varieties, and effective pasture management practices.

A model corn crib with its exterior made of clear plastic is featured at the crop storage exhibit. This gives visitors a chance to see how a corn crib can be built to dry either shelled or eared corn. Sample plans for nearly every type of building found on the farm will be displayed at this panel, and visitors will be able to order plans that interest them.

Ways to lower the damage from corn borers is the main topic of the insect control exhibit. At this panel, the latest information from the College of Agriculture about the use of insecticides will be available for the asking. An insect control specialist will be at the exhibit to answer individual questions about insect control problems.

The Caravan will make a one-day stop in Weeping Water. According to Clarence Schmadeke, Cass county extension agent, the exhibits will be open from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m. There will be no speeches. Folks will be free to come and go as they please.

'Political Road' Charge Put By Land Owner Near Nehawka

Ray Pollard of Nehawka told the Journal Friday he is one of the objectors to improvement of a road from Nehawka north to State Highway No. 1, the center of a news story in Thursday Journal.

A group of citizens from Nehawka met with the Cass county board of commissioners with a demand that the road be improved.

Mr. Pollard said "is nothing out a political road" and the movement is spurred by an Omaha man who bought a farm in the area then found he couldn't get across a creek unless the road was improved.

Mr. Pollard said the road has a good gravel surface and does not need improvement.

He said Second District Commissioner Ray Norris was to see him Friday about a right-of-way across his land.

Mr. Norris said Tuesday that the road had been promised for improvement about two years ago but money was not available. He said he expects federal matching money to be available to improve the road with bids let, possibly, this spring.

The road could be improved except for one bridge which will have to serve for the present.

The Journal was told this week that there were three objectors to the road who would not give right-of-way for the improvement. Other than Mr. Pollard, no names have been learned.

A change in the way the road enters Nehawka has caused new rights-of-way to be sought. Half of the six-mile road lies in District No. 1 and half in District No. 2.

Tree, House Landmarks Go Nehawka Fire

NEHAWKA (Special) — The Nehawka farm home, recently destroyed by fire and an enormous maple tree near it killed by the fire, were landmarks in this community.

The home was built in 1870 by the late Eugene Munn, Sr., and was purchased by the late Mr. and Mrs. Fred Nutzman in 1900. The 12-room home was the scene of many social functions, including parties, club meetings, and dinners. The Nutzman family, Eugene Nutzman, Mrs. Will Ost, Mrs. Henry Ross and Mrs. Amelia Balfour were noted for their hospitality far and wide.

The home was occupied by four generations, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Nutzman, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Nutzman and Mr. and Mrs. Deane Nutzman and children, who had recently moved into the home.

The huge maple tree, 80 years old, had to be cut down following the fire. It was planted in 1876 by the Munn's. It measured 52 inches in diameter near the base and stood near the southeast corner of the house.

Mrs. Wm. Schmidtman, Sr., recently returned from the hospital.

Sharon Fleischman Student Nurse Rites

LINCOLN — Sharon Fleischman of Plattsmouth was among 47 student nurses at Lincoln General Hospital School of Nursing capped in ceremonies at the Trinity Lutheran church here Sunday afternoon.

Herbert Anderson, hospital administrator, gave a welcome address; Mrs. Jennie Thompson, Mrs. Frank Sorrell and Miss Thora K. Patterson, director of nursing, also took part in the service.

Invocation and benediction were by the Rev. F. Worthman. The girls were capped by their "big sister" in the senior class, Miss Rachel Lillich who was capped by her real big sister, Miss Ruth Lillich. Both are from Broken Bow.

Mrs. Martha Bates is at River-view home.
