OUT of OLD NEBRASKA

According to an account by N. C. Abbott, published some years ago by the State Historical Society, there are 42 post offices in the United States using the name "Lincoln," alone or in composition. Nebraska's capital city is by far the largest and most important of these places and the week of Abraham Lincoln's birthday seems like a good time to review the circumstances under which the name was bestowed.

Throughout the territorial period there had been a great deal of dissatisfaction, particularly in the South Platte section, with the choice of Omaha as the territorial capital, and shortly after Nebraska was admitted to the Union as a state, March 1, 1867, there was a strong drive to remove the capital from Omaha. Governor David Butler was an important factor in the anti-Omaha group and in a special session of the legislature, called by the Governor May 16, 1867, a bill was passed, "to provide for the location of the seat of government of the State of Nebraska and the erection of public buildings thereat."

The bill originally provided that a commission consisting of the governor, the secretary of state, and the auditor, should select, before July 15, 1867, from lands belonging to the state, within the counties of Lancaster, Seward, and the south half of Butler and Saunders, not less than 640 acres for the town to be named and known as "Capital City."

The change from this rather cumbersome and characterless name to "Lincoln" came about largely as the result of J. H. N. Patrick of Douglas County, an ardent Democrat and one of the stronger opponents of the new state capital south of the Platte.

Senator Patrick moved to change the name from "Capital City" to "Lincoln," hoping if his motion was successful to drive enough Democratic votes from South of the Platte away from the measure to bring about its defeat. The then late President Lincoln was not in 1867 the universally admired hero he has since become—politics were too bitter and the fires of disunion too hot. Nevertheless, the Democrats from south of the Platte refused to let political considerations play them from doing what they believed to be their duty to their section. They voted, to a man, for the relocation with the new name and "Capital City" became Lincoln.

REVIVED 'DEAD' BOY DIES

Farmingham, Mass.—When a welding torch in his garage at home exploded, David A. Abiondi, 1, was critically injured. A vein near the junction of the jugular vein had been severed. Rushed to a hospital, David's heart stopped beating almost immediately after he had been placed on the operating table. A surgeon of the hospital staff which worked desperately to save his life, opened David's chest and massaged his heart. After 40 minutes, the heart responded feebly and the process was continued for more than 2½ hours. The youth revived and lived four days, but finally died, although many blood transfusions were given to him and oxygen was administered.

It Happened In NEBRASKA---

The problem of keeping an adequate water supply at frontier army posts was even more difficult after the regulations of 1841. These required soldiers to bathe once a week, wash their feet twice a week! The men bathed in the dining room after supper, using half-barrels for tubs.

DID YOU EVER NOTICE—when folks are gathered to hear old stories like this, or to discuss yesterday's game—a refreshing glass of beer makes the party so much more enjoyable? For beer is a friendly beverage. It tastes so good—fits every occasion. Enjoy it!
