

Chemicals Help Cut Farming Costs

Farmers can look for new and better chemical "hired hands" from scientists like the above, at work in one of the greenhouse laboratories of Monsanto Chemical Company's agricultural chemicals research center at Creve Coeur, Mo. Doctors Clyde L. Wilson (left), John M. Demming and Ernest Jaworski make bench tests of a new chemical killer for weedy grasses which does not injure corn.

Cost-conscious farmers will be turning to a wider use of farm chemicals this year to help bolster their income against sagging prices. Their goal is not a larger yield of crops in surplus, but a bigger margin of profit per unit of farm yield. And chemicals have proved to be the lowest-priced "hired hands."

Weeds alone cost American farmers an estimated $4 billion (that's right, billion) each year; almost as much as the nation's corn crop is worth. Farmers in the Corn Belt usually cultivate their corn three to five times a season, mostly for weed control. At $1.25 or so per acre per cultivation, that means a tillage cost of anywhere from $3.75 to $6.25 per acre for the crop.

At a recent Weed Society of America meeting, a report of tests conducted in Ohio showed that weeds in corn on many soils could be controlled chemically at a cost of only $3.40 per acre. Yields from the chemically-treated crops were about the same as from mechanical cultivation. Thus, the chemical weed control gave equal results at considerably lower costs.

The same thing applies to pasture, too, where chemicals can help more palatable and nutritious forage plants take over without reseeding. Grass production was upped 75 per cent on permanent native Nebraska pastures simply by using 2,4-D to control iron weed and other broadleaves.

The big farm chemical producers such as Monsanto in St. Louis are investing huge sums of money in research for new and even better farm chemicals to do highly efficient and special farm jobs. Monsanto reports that it screens more than 2,000 new compounds each year as potential farm chemicals.

Meanwhile, the 2,4-D and others now available are made more efficient by improved emulsifiers, anti-clogging agents and such. They are better tools today—and better buys.

It all adds up to a strong indication that higher farm profits may be just around the corner; the corner that can be cut on production costs by putting chemical "hired hands" to work.

Kid Stuff
Dr. Brendel was nursing a sore ankle last week following a minor mishap. With spring in the air, the doctor took his young son out to help him fly a kite. While running, trying to get the kite aloft, Doc stepped into a hole and sprained his ankle. His future plan for getting a kite in the air, is sitting in the back of the station wagon while his wife drives.

To Let Contract
John Valley, the Cotton King, will this week let the contract for keeping the Boll Weevil out of his experimental cotton plants. Bill Spradlin of Bill's Pest Control seems to have the inside track.

Faithful Chauffeur
One of the nice things about living in a small community, is that you are in closer contact with the many folk who make up the population of our town. In my opinion the award for good citizen of the week should go to Everett Newton. Each Sunday he goes to the Masonic Home and in his car brings to the Methodist Church, guests of the Home, who need transportation to the church service. He is certainly deserving of recognition.

Another Winner!
Hiatt Furniture this year, like last year, had a splendid window display in the Easter Spirit. Much effort goes into this display, and it deserves our appreciation.
