Cass County School Study

Editor's Note: This is the second in a series of articles carrying the complete report of the recent study for the County School System. Readers are urged to keep each of the series along with accompanying charts and graphs for future reference in this vital question.

PART II Characteristics of a Good School

A good school will satisfy the educational needs of each individual. This implies a program comprehensive enough to meet the needs and interests of all youth. The citizens are responsible for the support of schools which meet those needs.

It is not the purpose of the public school to train youth in one limited, narrow or preconceived curriculum but rather to give them opportunities to broad educational experiences whereby they may become independent, competent citizens who can think for themselves as members of a free society. If we accept this principle, and we must if we believe in the "American Way", then the school must afford a broad educational opportunity to each youth.

A child's growth is continuous as he develops mentally, emotionally, and physically from total dependency at birth to maturity in adulthood. A good public school program provides for the developmental needs of all children from kindergarten through grade twelve.

A good school provides: A one-half day kindergarten continuous throughout the school year under the direction of a well qualified teacher. Kindergarten is the child's introduction to at least thirteen years of formal education. It is a readiness experience to help the child make the transition from the home and family environment to school and community life. Special facilities, teaching materials and equipment are necessary.

B. An elementary school staffed with professional and qualified teachers in grade one through grade six. The elementary school has the responsibility to provide learning experiences for each child according to his mental, emotional, social and physical interests and capabilities. The developmental requirements of growing youth are taken care of through the teaching of:

1. Fundamental skills. These emphasize reading, spelling, writing, arithmetic and language, including oral and written expressions. A sound reading program would include experiences in reading readiness, word recognition (through phonics and other devices or methods), understanding of materials read, and the use of library materials. Spelling and writing are provided, with emphasis on satisfactory expression of ideas rather than rote recitation. Arithmetic provides experiences and skills which will lay the foundation for a better understanding of the mathematical competencies. Stress on the fundamentals of arithmetic to assure accuracy and speed in both oral and written computation is important.

2. Social understandings. These emphasize a thorough knowledge of the world in which we live. Integration of the geographical, historical, sociological and economy aspects of our society and culture is necessary to the preparation of children for good citizenship. In the primary grades emphasis is given to the understanding of the community, state, nation and world in which the elementary child is living.

3. Science experiences. These emphasize a general knowledge of the physical world in which we live. Emphasis is given to experimentation, demonstrations, observations, research skills and the abilities for recording of information. The effective teaching of science necessitates the opportunity for pupils to participate. Thus, it is essential to have sufficient and appropriate materials and equipment for such activities in the classroom.
