FOR JULY 22
Bible Comment:
City of Sin Was Springboard For Christianity

THE new disciples of Jesus were called "Christians" first in Antioch, in Syria. This city of outward grandeur and proportions was a city of paradox. The moral corruption of its people beneath the grandeur and the seeming culture was such that when a Roman orator deplored the moral decay of Rome, he did so by saying that "the Orontes had overflowed the Tiber." Surely this was a strange place for the progressive movement of Christianity to take its rise. The beliefs, character and ideals of these early Christians were so much at variance with the life of the prosperous and licentious city that not only was the contrast so extreme, but it seemed incredible that so small a group, probably called Christians as a nickname or term of reproach, could presume to attain any su-premaccy. Yet, the great city on the Orontes is a thing of the past, centuries ago gone down in ruin, while the Christianity that the little group represented, coming from Jerusalem and taking hold in Antioch, has spread and taken root in every part of the world.
Yet, the more one thinks of it, Antioch was a fitting place for Christianity to assume its new missionary beginning; for is not the purpose of Christianity to conquer sin and licentiousness, to take root in an evil world and grow, conquering the evil?
Associated with this city of Antioch is the first missionary journey of Paul and Barnabas.
When the disciples at Jerusalem heard how deeply the new faith had taken hold at Antioch, they sent Barnabas, a good man and true, as their representative to this new Christian community.
Barnabas went to Tarsus, where he found Saul, the new convert, henceforth known as Paul, and from Antioch, these two men stretched out through Asia Minor in their first missionary journey.
