

Gov. 'Vic' To Tour Park Site

Reports are that Governor Victor Anderson and a group of other State officials, including heads of the Parks and Game Commission will be in Plattsmouth this week to take a long look at the old rifle range area north of the city.

Comprising over 900 acres, the rifle range site was given the state several years by the Federal government following World War II. Buildings in the area purchased at that time by Wesleyan Methodist Church Diocese and is being used as a youth camp and convalescence area for hospital patients.

For several years, wild life organizations and groups of Plattsmouth residents, joined by others from Omaha and nearby cities, have urged that the area be created as a state park. Since coming into possession of the state, the area has been allowed to grow up into weeds and underbrush, with exception of a few acres leased out for crop production.

One of the most ideal locations in eastern Nebraska, for a park, the acreage joins both the Platte and Missouri rivers on the north and east. Ideal sites are available for creation of man-made lakes for boating and fishing. Thousands of giant trees dot the area to assist in making this one of Nebraska's top park and picnic grounds, that could provide recreation for thousands, including boating on the rivers.

With Federal funds available, according to Sec. of Interior Fred Seaton, to assist states to preserve park and game refuges, little could stand in the way of an early decision on the Plattsmouth site.

Resident of eastern Nebraska, are encouraged that at last this area has been recognized and that Gov. Anderson and other state heads have included the site in state park plans.
