Bible Comment:

No Room For Prejudice In Christianity

ON a missionary journey in the town of Antioch in Pisidia, Paul was in the synagogue on the Sabbath, preaching a sermon. It made such an impression upon the gathering that they invited Paul to preach the following Sabbath.

Apparently, the fame of Paul had spread throughout the city, and a great company—not all of them Jews—gathered to hear him the second time.

Trouble developed. It was the sort of trouble that usually develops when someone with a new gospel, or a new emphasis, comes preaching and gains a hearing. He quickly arouses either the jealousy or opposition of the constituted religious authorities. It was the sort of thing that John Wesley encountered time and again in his itinerant preaching in England.

But the opposition of the Jews in Antioch had a very important result. When Paul saw the intolerance aroused among the Gentiles in the city, he turned from the Jews, who were unwilling to hear him, to preach to the Gentiles.

The fury of religious prejudice is not easily assuaged. In the name of religion, men who profess to be acting conscientiously can sometimes do the most dastardly things. What might have been a local church quarrel became a matter of the city itself.

The Jews, hostile to Paul, stirred up the Gentiles as well, and instigated such persecution against Paul that he was forced to leave the city.

The point to be made here is this: The Christian experience is not limited to either Jew or Gentile. In Christ, there is neither Jew nor Greek, neither bond nor free, neither male nor female. All are one.

This is the essential teaching of Christianity—so difficult for even Christians to grasp and practice. It strikes at the very root of all narrowness and bigotry and prejudice. And, at the same time, it asserts the only sort of unity that can be real and genuine.
