Do you know why you shouldn't buy "a pig in a poke"?

We didn't either until a few days ago, but we think it is a cute story that you'll enjoy hearing.

This old story originated many years ago in Ireland where the farmers took their produce and livestock to the market for sale every Saturday. Little suckling pigs were a very popular commodity in season, but they were slippery little rascals to handle, so it was common practice to put them in a burlap bag, or a "poke", as it was called then. And because the buyer of the little piglet didn't want to go chasing it all over the fair grounds, if it got loose, he didn't bother to untie the bag, and just bought it by weight, sight unseen.

This was a very happy situation until some wiseacre got the idea of putting one of the barnyard cats in the poke instead of the piglet, and then it became very risky to buy "a pig in a poke." So shrewd buyers would insist on opening the poke first to see what they were getting, and very frequently they would "let the cat out of the bag" which is how the expression originated.

There are still an awful lot of 'cats' being sold for 'piglets' today, but shrewd buyers haven't changed much... they like to see what they are getting when they buy something.

Sorghum Stubble Should Not Be Used Until Freeze

LINCOLN — Sorghum stubble should not be pastured until 2 or 3 weeks after a killing freeze according to Dr. T. W. Dowe, associate professor of animal husbandry at the University of Nebraska.

Sorghum stubble produces some green growth until a freeze occurs. The freeze kills the plants and after they have been dormant 3 weeks prussic acid danger should largely be eliminated.

Liquor Commission Gives Suspension

The state liquor commission Thursday suspended the Class C Liquor license of a Plattsmouth tavern owner for ten days.

The commission found that Albert Pelzer sold a pint of whiskey and a six pack of beer on credit September 8th. The commission also found that the licensee had insufficient lighting in his place of business.

Correction

A story in the Journal's Thursday, Nov. 1, edition carried the wrong credit for sponsorship of the Halloween party Wednesday evening. Credit should have gone to Modern Woodmen who co-sponsored the affair with the Plattsmouth Veterans of Foreign Wars post.
