

Tourists See Florida, Visit Marine Studios

Editor's Note: This is the fifth of a series of articles by Myrtle Wood dealing with experiences and sights viewed while on a recent farm tour to Nassau, Bahamas.

BY MYRTLE WOOD

We docked at Miami at 8 a. m. and proceeded to tour the city in launches and buses. Florida has been spoken of as

"The Land Undeveloped and the Home of Houses."

We looked at houses costing millions of dollars. The estate of James Dearing is quoted at 16 million and blocks of hotels are multimillion dollar enterprises.

In the mid west the standard house consists of a kitchen, living room, and a bedroom or two, to be lived in 365 1/4 days a year. Many of the mansions we saw are occupied by the owners only a few weeks each year.

The Florida air is balmy except when a hurricane sweeps in and the swimming is glorious. One Nebraska farmer, however, said when he got home he would have to pump the water but he could soak up then.

There should be a solution to this surplus water problem. Perhaps the houses cast such big shadows the water can't evaporate. My own first house cast no shadow and the grasshoppers swarmed up and ate the vegetation off the top of it, but if the same type of architecture were followed here, the sharks could come in and eat the people. Maybe it could be included in the building plans that all displaced water was to be pipelined to arid regions. This would tend to bring parlors and kitchens closer together and also allow the Midwestern farmer to bask longer in their sunshine without endangering their life savings.

We took the train for Jacksonville and boarded buses for St. Augustine, the oldest city in the United States.

The next trip was to the Marine Studios Aquarium. This has been constructed for a tourist attraction of huge open tanks in which has been reproduced the deep sea world containing a big assortment of Marine animal life. Three hundred port holes allow the visitor to view the interior while sea divers go down to feed the fish and huge porpoises jump their length into the air to catch a fish from an attendant's hand.

We then went west to the University of Florida at Gainesville, where we saw two cattle set ups. One was pure bred and the other, a research to see what level of fertilization is best for pasture. About 1/4 Brahma maintains size and heat adaptation of the cattle and generous fertilization of grass makes for pasture and silage where there is an absence of grain for feed.

Woman Has Vivid Memory Of '88 Storm

Mrs. Neva Read Phone 6021

Mrs. Eugenia DeLes Dernier remembers the snow storm that came on Jan. 12, 1888. They lived west of Nehawka and she attended school at Center Hill about four miles west of Nehawka.

She recalls it was a warm day with only a flake of snow teacher was Rev. Warren Lynde, the minister of the United Brethren Church.

The storm hit just as the teacher was calling the roll to dismiss.

Mr. Cline was working for Mrs. DeLes Dernier's mother. He was going to pick up the school children in the sled. As the storm hit it seemed to pick up big drifts.

There were 10 children loaded onto the sled. A blanket was thrown over the children and the teacher laid on it to keep the children covered.

The driver could not see the road so they relied on the old black dog that always went wherever the horses went.

When they arrived at the home of Mrs. De Les Dernier the horses eyes were frozen shut. Mrs. De Les Dernier was 14 years old at the time and recalls the past very vividly.

Church will begin at 9:30 each Sunday after Feb. 1, at the Christian Church. The new min-

Florida ranks 15th in the production of cattle. We took the train again at Lake City for Mobile and New Orleans.
