Three State Shrine Temples Aid Crippled Children's Program

Sharon Cox Bing Grunwald

Ten year old Sharon Cox, Omaha, recognizes the kindly smile of the big man wearing the fez as that of a friend. Crippled by polio five years ago, Sharon is one of many thousands of youngsters who have been treated by Shriners Hospitals for Crippled Children. She chats happily with Bing Grunwald, potentate of Omaha's Tangier Temple.

There are 17 of the Shrine Hospitals; 14 of which are in the United States and 1 each in the Territory of Hawaii, the Republic of Mexico, and the Dominion of Canada.

These institutions have a total capacity of 1,040 beds. A recent report released by the Shrine shows that for the last eight months there has been an occupancy of 1,018 beds. Operations performed total 2,464 and the average per day cost of caring for the children has been $11.56. Average cost per patient is $976.18 and the average amount of time patients have been hospitalized has been 85 days.

Today little Sharon Cox cheerfully looks forward to the time when she can make use of a bright new pair of roller skates which she has long wanted.

"We'd never been able to afford the operations ourselves," explains Sharon's mother, Mrs. Emilie Cox.

Benevolent Shriners care nothing about unimportant matters of race or creed. All they are interested in, is "where do you hurt and how can we help?" In Nebraska three Shrine Temples sponsor the work for crippled children: Tekamah Temple at Hastings, Sesostris Temple at Lincoln, and Tangier Temple in Omaha.
